I have decided upon the cash value; and it gives me pleasure to testify that, as I anticipated it would be when I took out the policy, IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY. This returns me the full premiums of the 15 years and over 4½ per cent. compound interest, in addition to which you have carried the risk upon my life. In view of the lowering rates of interest which have been obtainable during the latter portion of the period, it is difficult to see how this excellent result could have been surpassed.

Yours sincerely,

HUMAN SACRIFICES

On the Altar of Diabetes, Saved by Dodd's Kidney Pills, Only.

Hardly a family in the country is free from Diabetes. Great thirst, failing sight, numbness in the thighs, bleeding gums, swollen ankles, emaciation, nervousness, pale or turbid urine, loss of sexual power, decaying teeth, pains in the loins or small of the back, are all positive signs that Diabetes is in the system.

Do you know how it ends? In DEATH. A premature, horrible, agonized, pitiful death. The victim has no peace, no ease in life. His days are filled with tortures. His nights are waking dreams of agony. He longs to die, yet fears the terrors of his end. He dies, a bloated, fetid, repulsive mass of corruption. That is the only end of unchecked Diabetes. Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure it. They drive it out of the system thoroughly, create new, clean blood, rebuild the diseased kidneys, and restore robust health.

A Woman's Crime.

A THRILLING STORY OF LOVE AND ADVENTURE.

By LAWRENCE M. LYNCH.

Author of "John Arthur's Ward," "The Diamond Coterie," "Against Odds," Etc., Etc.

In Lenore Armyn's nature there was one most dangerous element. She was entirely devoid of fear, and was lacking in the worldly wisdom which begets prudence. Among the light-hearted pleasure-lovers who constituted the Ruthven family, there was none capable of advising Lenore Armyn. And the time was not far distant when the girl would realise this fact. For the present the days were halcyon.

The Ruthvens were fond of society, and scarcely an evening passed that did not bring its little card party, composed of a few of Charlie Ruthven's friends, together with the ladies of the family, and perhaps Miss Van Buren, the Washington young lady, some other of the female friends of the family.

Mrs. Warren, too, had various admirers, who dropped in occasionally for an evening's chat, or sent the ladies theatre tickets. And Clarence Arteveldt had become almost a fixture on the North Side. Since that first evening, passed in the society of Leonore Armyn, he had become her shadow. But, while he sought to dazzle Lenore with his wealth, if he could not induce her to fall in love with his "womanishly" handsome face, he was mindful not to pay his court too openly. Accordingly, he planned numerous excursions and pleasure parties, which included the entire Ruthven family, as well as any male friend of the family. There were theatres and drives, steamboat excursions, and sails upon the lake, autumn picnics, impromptu suppers, concerts, and lectures—always something; and always Clarence Arteveldt was the leader, the life of the party. At least, he was the leader of the men; for no eye was brighter, no laugh gayer or more frequent, and no repartee more ready and sparkling than that of Lenore Armyn.

It was a new life to the beautiful girl, and she enjoyed it to the full. The home circle was always gay and pleasant; in the daytime there were the parks, the shops, the matinee; in the evening some pleasure always fresh. And everywhere was Clarence Arteveldt. Thus passed three long weeks of the lovely September.

One morning, Lenore, Kate, and Mrs. Warren—or Jess, as she was usually called—set out for a walk.

"We won't go to the park," said Lenore. "I am tired of it. Let us go down some of those queer Dutch streets and see the fat women and the babies and the dogs and cats. Let's see low life for once. Come, girls!" And, grumbling a little, but obedient to the stronger will, the two followed Lenore.

Nearly an hour thereafter, as little Mrs. Ruthven sat, humming softly, and rocking the cradle of the young Ruthven, who steadfastly refused to close his eyes in sleep, the door was flung violently open, and Jess Warren, pale and breathless, rushed in.

"Oh!" she cried, clenching her two hands, as she invariably did when very eager or much excited—"Oh! Nett, Nett! Lenore is arrested; a policeman has got her—and Kitty, too, I guess."

Mrs. Ruthven sprang to her feet, almost overturning the baby.

"Jess Warren, what do you mean?" she cried. "Lenore arrested! you are crazy! What for? Tell me?"

"What for?" screeched Jess; "why, she nearly killed a man, or else killed him quite. She knocked him down, any way, and she is arrested—there!"

For a moment Mrs. Ruthven stood transfixed. Then she flew at Jess, and, shaking her with all her strength, cried out:—

"Now, Jess Warren, stop acting like a mad woman; what prank are you trying to play me?"

"I am not playing a prank," whimpered Jess. "Don't you see how scared I am. I tell you it is true."

"What is true?" stamping her slippered foot wrathfully. "Tell me instantly."

"Well, I am going to," cried Jess, beginning to recover herself a little. "You see Lenore dragged us down among all those horrid, nasty smelling Germans, and at last turned into the awfullest, awfullest dirty street you ever saw in your life. We tried to coax her to turn back, but no, she was seeing Chicago, she said, and she must see all of it. So on we went, and oh, how it did smell! When we had got to the nastiest, meanest, dirtiest place of all, we heard some one screaming, and some one else swearing in awful Dutch. There was a sort of alley-way, and as we came to it there we saw a big man beating a woman with his great, dirty, awful fists. The woman was down on her knees beside a little pile of wood, and a mallet and wedge lay beside the man. Before we could think Lenore had rushed at the man screaming in the awfullest way, 'Stop, you beast, you devil; stop, I tell you.' But the man roared out another oath, and struck the woman again so hard that she fell over upon the wood. In an instant Lenore seized that great mallet and struck the man an awful hard blow upon the head. We could hear his skull crack. Oh, Nett, it was awful. And there stood Lenore above the man, and you could fairly see the sparks fly out of her eyes. 'Lie there, you brute,' she said, and I thought she would kick him with her boot. By that time a ragged little girl ran up, and at her heels a big, ugly policeman. I saw him go up and take Lenore by the arm, and then I ran away as fast as I could."

Having finished her "awful" story, Mrs. Warren sat down to recover her breath.

"And Kate?" asked Mrs. Ruthven, all in a tremble.

"I tell you, he has got her too. Think of it Nett—Kate and that awful Lenore locked up in a police station."

"Who talks of my being locked up in a police station," cried a clear, vibrant voice, and simultaneously the door swung open, and Lenore Armyn appeared upon the threshold, with cheeks flaming, eyes blazing, and nostrils quivering. "Is it you, Mrs. Warren? Oh, you pitiful coward; you would stand by and see a human being killed by a brute and then run away and lie about one who dared to interfere. Bah! I despise you." And Lenore Armyn turned on her heel and walked straight to her own room.

"Jess, how could you," said Kate Seaton, who had followed Lenore into the room, looking very pale but quite collected. "You have made Lenore so angry."

"I made her angry," retorted Jess, growing suddenly brave. "I made her knock that man down, I suppose. Heavens, I am afraid to live in the house with Lenore Armyn; she is a fiend incarnate. I shall never forget how she looked. But of course you won't say a word against her, not if she kills the whole family some day. It's a pity the policeman didn't shut her up," said the now hysterical Jess.

"If you are afraid to live here you had better change your quarters," said Kate, in a white heat. "Rest assured Lenore will never kill you, she doesn't care enough about you, one way or the other."

"Don't she?" hissed Jess. "Well, I hope some day to prove more worthy her consideration," and she flounced out of the room.

As soon as the door had closed behind her, Mrs. Ruthven turned to her sister.

"Kate, what on earth does this all mean? Did Lenore Armyn strike a man?"

"Yes, Nettie, she did," replied Kate Seaton, gravely. "She felled him with one blow. He went down like an ox, and he deserved it. But oh, it was terrible to see Lenore. I never dreamed she could possess such a temper. I have seen her eyes flash, and her hands clench, at the mention of wrong or outrage; she was always the champion of the weak. I have seen her interfere between quarrelling children more than once, and shake a boy as big as herself nearly out of his boots. But nothing like this. Nettie, she was livid to the lips—and her eyes, I shall never forget them. She told the policeman what she had done, and he looked thunderstruck; then, as we saw people coming, he told her she had served the brute right, but that she had better go home as quick as possible. 'I wouldn't arrest you if you had killed him,' he said, 'but some one else might if you stayed.' Then I wanted her to run, but she would not, of course I would not leave her, and she walked along so steadily all the way, but with that dreadful look of anger on her face. Nettie, I would not wrong Lenore Armyn for the world. If any man ever does, she will murder him."

CHAPTER XI.

SETTING THE SNARE.

Lenore Armyn kept her room until luncheon time; but when she came down and took her seat at the table she was, outwardly at least, her usual calm self.

When the heat of her passion had died away, she had regretted her hasty speech to Jess Warren, and now she turned toward her, saying:—

"Mrs. Warren, I trust you will consider the state of my mind when I so insulted you to-day. I was beside myself. I never knew until to-day what an evil temper I possessed. Will you try and forget my words?"

It is only generous natures that can make or accept apologies graciously and gracefully. Jess Warren was not of this order.

"It's of no consequence," she said, with an effort at carelessness that was an utter failure. "I am not at all offended. Let it pass."

Let it pass. Jess Warren would watch for an opportunity to avenge this insult to her wounded vanity.

"I was terribly angry," said Lenore, turning her eyes toward Mrs. Ruthven. "Inwardly, I am angry yet. I think if I should hear that I had dealt that villain his death-blow I could not be hypocrite enough to say that I regretted it. I don't like to talk of the affair; let us never mention it, please."

They had planned a drive for the following day. Clarence Arteveldt was to come with his landau and take the three ladies, Mrs. Warren, Lenore Armyn, and Kate Seaton, for a drive in the parks.

"We must make the most of this fine weather," Arteveldt had said; "September is the month for pleasant drives, and it is almost gone."

Clarence Arteveldt had been falling deeper and deeper into love's quagmire, and suspense was becoming unbearable. He had decided, over and over again, to declare his love for Lenore, but somehow the right sort of an opportunity had been lacking.

If anyone had hinted that he feared a refusal, this drawing-room god would have laughed in derision; and yet, there was a something in the manner of Lenore Armyn, the obscure orphan, that kept him at a distance, and made him fear the ordeal of a test. She was so different from any girl he had ever known; she had such a manifest disregard for wealth and station, he could not understand her. But the more incomprehensible she became, the more he loved her.

As they drove through the city on this pleasant day, he was inwardly vowing to put an end to his suspense, and declare himself. He did not just know how the opportunity for a declaration was to be brought about, but, all unknown to himself, he had an able coadjutor.

Mrs. Warren, the artful, was fully aware of the situation. It was plain enough to all save Lenore that Clarence Arteveldt was her lover. And it was plain enough to Mrs. Warren that Lenore Armyn had no love for the young man. She had not been in daily, almost hourly, contact with the frank girl without learning to read her opinion of the men who hovered about her.

"What a splendid catch Clarence Arteveldt would be for you, Lenore," she had said, one day. "So rich, and then so handsome. And I think he likes you."

"A splendid catch, indeed," the girl had replied, with her ringing laugh. "Why, Mrs. Warren! you wouldn't condemn me to live all my days with such an aimless cumberer of the ground as he, would you? If one wants a parlour ornament, a China man would be equally attractive, and much less trouble. Think of being married to a pretty man!"

Jess Warren was one of those women who like to have a love affair on hand, even if it belongs to some one else. And it is probable she would have put her little cat's paw into this one, even if Lenore Armyn had not incurred her displeasure. But then she would have sheathed the claws, and meddled in a different way. Now she was prepared to scratch.

They were driving south on Dearborn street, when a trifling incident occurred. They had halted at the Madison street crossing, because of the press of vehicles, and the passage of street cars, when Clarence Arteveldt, who sat beside Lenore, put a hand upon her arm, saying:—

"Miss Armyn, do you see that handsome fellow there waiting for that car to pass? The one in grey, I mean."

"Yes."

"That is a particular friend of mine." Then, as the carriage started forward, he leaned toward her, saying, in a low tone, "I can trust you with a secret; he is a detective."

As he uttered these words, Jess Warren, who could not hear them, and was watching the face of Lenore, said to herself:—

"What did he say to make her turn so pale?"

"You hardly saw him, Miss Armyn; look again," said the young man, in his ordinary tone. "Don't you call him a fine fellow?"

"I saw him," replied Lenore, looking directly away from the crossing, where Neil Bathurst stood, all unconscious of the proximity of the carriage and its occupants. "I saw him distinctly; he is certainly handsome. Can't we go faster now?"

They drove upon the south boulevard, and from thence to the western portion of the city.

"Let's drive in," said Jess, as they approached Union park. "Let's drive in and get out, and see the horrid bear, and go up on the mound; we have driven so far that it will rest us, and Lenore has never been in Union park on foot. Have you, dear?"

Thus appealed to, Lenore, who had been invariably polite to Jess, on principle, signified her approval of the plan, and they left the driver to meditate at his leisure, while they walked about the park.

FREDDIE KEIRSTEAD'S CASE.

His Legs, from His Feet to His Body Entirely Raw, and Ran a Blood-Tinged Irritating Water.

THE CURE B. B. B. MADE IN HIS CASE WAS PERMANENT.

IN EIGHT YEARS THERE HAS BEEN NO RETURN OF THE DISEASE.

The triumphs of Burdock Blood Bitters over disease are eclipsing anything ever heard of in the annals of medicine. The cases being published from time to time showing how thorough and permanent are the cures made by this remedy, are making the sick and afflicted consider whether it is worth their while wasting money on medicines that can only offer them temporary relief—and perhaps not even that—when a few bottles of B. B. B. will do all that any medicine can do in giving temporary relief, and besides, will make a cure so permanent that there will be no return of the trouble.

FREDDIE KEIRSTEAD.

In the severest forms of skin diseases, Salt Rheum or Eczema, Tetter, Shingles, Ring Worm, B. B. B. applied externally and taken internally will take out the burning and itching, give prompt relief, and make a permanent cure.

It was so in the case of Freddie Keirstead of Snider Mt., N.B.

He had one of the most aggravated cases of Salt Rheum ever known.

B. B. B. cured him so thoroughly that after eight years the disease has shown no signs of returning.

Read the following letter just received from his mother:

"With gratitude I can testify to the wonderful curative powers of Burdock Blood Bitters. Eight years ago our little son, Freddy, was afflicted with salt rheum and was in a dreadful condition. His legs, from the soles of his feet to his body were entirely raw, and ran a bloody water, which appeared to burn and itch until he was often in great agony.

"After trying several remedies, we resolved to give B. B. B. a trial.

"You can imagine with what delight and gratitude we saw our boy entirely cured after using one bottle and part of the second. We gave him the remainder of the second bottle, and from that time till the present he has never had a sign of salt rheum or a sick day. You need not wonder that I think there is no other medicine can equal Burdock Blood Bitters to purify the blood and build up the health and strength."

FOR THE VICTORIA MUSEUM.

An Interesting Picture of Older Peterborough.

Mr. R. M. Roy has taken for presentation to the Victoria Museum an 8x10 reproduction of a little card photograph of historical interest. The original is a possession of Mr. F. J. R. Mitchell, grocer, Hunter street, and is a picture of the old corner southwest of Hunter and George streets, as it appeared when his father, Mr. G. D. Mitchell, was in business there in the sixties. The shop on the corner is the "St. George Saloon." Next to it is shown in the picture, the hardware store of the late Robert Hamilton, with the sign of the circular saw; next that the shop of R. Stenson & Son, "Montreal Boot Store," and next south the grocery store of T. Beatty, who also added the occupation of veterinary surgeon to his established business. Old views of the town of any kind are very valuable contributions to the Museum, and persons who have them would be doing a good thing by permitting them to be photographed for deposit in the Victoria Museum.

THE FIFTY-SEVENTH BAND.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

SIR,—The members of the 57th Battalion Band desire to express through the columns of your paper their warm appreciation of the generous manner in which their appeal to the citizens for funds for the purchase of additional instruments has been met and to assure them that they will put forth their best endeavours to merit the confidence thus reposed in them. They would also direct the attention of the public to the fact that they have discontinued the custom of serenading, the same having become in the past few years —to put it mildly—a nuisance of very large dimensions. Again, thanking you for your liberality, we remain

Yours truly,
57TH BATT. BAND.

Silver Plating.

Silver plating neatly, promptly and cheaply done by the Peterborough Lock Manufacturing Company. Ladies' look over your silverware and when you have forks, knives, spoons or any pieces of silverware tarnished or plate worn off, bring it to us and have it nicely done over and made as good as new.—The Peterborough Lock Company. d

The Drawing Card.

No such opportunity has occurred for years to procure dress goods, staple dry goods and millinery of the same quality at such reasonable prices as that afforded by Messrs. R. H. Kells & Co.'s closing-out sale. In fact it is the "drawing card" of the season in this line. An imperative necessity exists for clearing the entire stock without delay on account of the firm deciding to retire from business. Cost price and even lower will not be a barrier to this sale. Holiday gift bargains is also stimulating this sale, and crowds of ladies find much that is appropriate for Christmas presents as well as regular wants. eodw

THE BIGAMY CASE.

Hull is Cleared of the Charge of Having Two Wives.

There was a big crowd in the police court this morning to hear the details of the Hull bigamy case, and a very mixed up state of affairs was revealed, resulting in the discharge of the prisoner, his first attempt on the matrimonial sea being shown to have been his marriage to a woman who had at the time another husband living. This voided the transaction as far as Hull was concerned, and, therefore, his second venture holds good as being his only marriage in the eyes of the law.

The charge against him stated that he married Mary Morey on Aug 19th, 1895, and Bella Tauran on Nov. 30th, 1898.

The first wife showed by her own evidence that she had married one George Jones in Chatham eight or nine years ago. She afterwards was wedded to the late Wm. Mowry, who committed suicide in Lakefield and, as stated, in 1895 again tried her luck, choosing Hull as her helpmate. On being married the couple drove to Lakefield on their honeymoon and spent the night there. Mrs. Hull left her husband in the morning she states, on learning that he had another woman. She then united her fortunes with those of General Tighe, for as she expressed it in court this morning, there was nothing else for her to do. She denied the statement that Hull's name had been erased from the marriage certficate and that of Tighe inserted in its place. She also denied being the cause of Mowry suiciding through eloping with a Kickapoo Indian doctor.

Mr. R. E. Wood conducted the prosecution on behalf of the Crown, and Mr. E. B. Stone appeared for the defence.

Another lot of Swiss Embroidered Pillow Shams just received, suitable for Xmas Presents, at MISS MELVILLE'S, Hunter Street.

WARSAW.

On the evening of the 9th inst, a few members representing the Warsaw Presbyterian congregation drove to the residence of Mrs. Alex. Smith. After a short interval devoted to conversation, Mrs. John Wasson, representing the congregation, and Mr. D. McIntosh, representing the Session, retired for a few minutes. When they again re-entered the room Mrs. Wasson had in her hand a beautiful life like crayon of the late Mr. Alex. Smith, and Mr. McIntosh also carried a life-like crayon of Mrs. Smith. On account of the recent sad and sudden bereavement which had occurred, Mrs. Wasson handed Miss Smith the following address instead of reading it:

To Miss Sarah Smith:

DEAR MISS SMITH,—On account of the sad event which occurred a few months ago, in the sudden death of your dear and much respected father, which event caused your retirement as organist of the Warsaw Presbyterian congregation and Sabbath school, a position which you filled with honour to yourself and pleasure to the congregation, we, as representatives of the congregation, desire to present you these two crayons of your father and mother as a slight token of the congregation's appreciation of the valuable services rendered by you as organist during the past few years, which you faithfully and consciously rendered for your love to the Lord Jesus Christ.

May you follow in the footsteps of your father's Lord and Master Jesus Christ, so that when the call comes to you to cease this world of trials, troubles, disease and death, may the removal result in a grand and glorious reunion with the dear and loved ones who have preceded us to that land where parting shall be unknown—the land of the glorified ones.

Signed on behalf of the congregation,
MRS. JOHN WASSON,
DONALD MCINTOSH.

Miss Smith was deeply affected, and in a few words conveyed thanks to the representatives of the congregation for their valuable gifts.

Time is Nearly up.

This is the week of weeks! Pre-eminently and emphatically the holiday shoppers' week. The week when the most dilatory of buyers must close their negotiations with Santa Claus. The enthusiasm of the crowds at the Peterborough Book Store is unbounded, and the people all like it. Nothing we've ever done begins to equal what we're doing now. A holiday halo illumes this store as if Christmas electricity had struck the place. Christmas chances broaden—competition ceases—and the happy crowds tell better than anything else the relation of the store to the community. The business is on closest touch with the people. Only a few days more on the calendar. How the time will fly! You have barely time to make out your list and select your presents. Shop early at the Peterborough Bookstore and the time spent will be spent in pleasure. Storm the store! Hundreds have been served already out of our princely stock, but heaps of good things are still left.—A. H. STRATTON & Co.

THE TELEGRAPHERS.

Federated Railway Bodies May Go to Montreal.

A DAY DISCUSSING DETAILS.

The Grand Trunk Management's Reply to the Demands of the Men Submitted at Wednesday's Meeting—Mr. Powell Has Made a Reply—There Will Be Another Meeting.

Toronto, Dec. 22.—A communication has been received from the representatives of the Grand Trunk operators in Montreal by the committee here of the Federation of Railway Employes, stating that their presence may be needed there to help bring about a satisfactory settlement and help to avoid an inevitable strike. If General Superintendent McGuigan refuses to hear the committee to-day it looks as if a strike cannot be avoided.

AN OFFICIAL STATEMENT.

The Grand Trunk Management's Reply to the Telegraphers' Demands.

Montreal, Dec. 22.—The meeting between Mr. Hays and the telegraphers yesterday afternoon was passed in discussing details, and the conference was adjourned till to-day.

The Grand Trunk management have issued the following official statement:

It has been stated that the company had refused to grant an increase in pay, or shorter hours, to the telegraphers. This statement is not correct. The company is willing, and has so indicated to the committee, that we should take points where the pay may not seem commensurate with the amount of work involved, and where the compensation is less than is paid by our neighboring lines under similar conditions, and adjust them, but the company cannot make a uniform minimum scale, as is desired by the telegraphers, which shall apply to all stations, whether or not the employe is provided with house, fuel and light, as is the case at a large number of the stations; whether there are but two trains a day each way, 15 trains a day each way; and whether the earnings of the station may be but $100 or less per month, or $1,000 per month; and without taking into consideration the commissions that may be paid by the express company and commercial telegraph company, which in many instances amount to considerable sums in addition to the regular pay of the agent and operator. As all of these conditions must be fairly considered in determining what the pay of each particular station may be, to put all stations on an equality, regardless of the conditions named, would mean great injustice to the more important stations, and would raise the pay of the smaller stations to a basis far beyond what the earnings of the station would warrant.

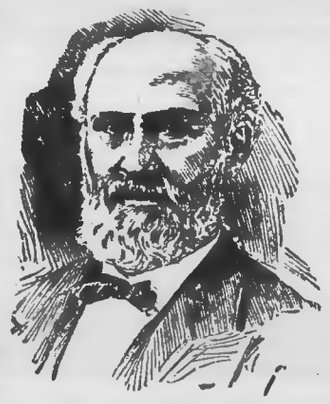
The company is willing to grant the telegraphers a schedule of rules and regulations which does not differ to a radical extent from those granted by the Canadian Pacific and Canada Atlantic Railways.

The above was in reply to a letter from the committee declaring that they could reach no understanding with Mr. McGuigan. Mr. Hays also expressed his willingness to have another meeting with the committee in the afternoon.

Powell Has Made Reply.

Grand Chief Powell of the O.R.T. has issued a lengthy reply to the Grand Trunk's contention, in which he claims that the demand of the Grand Trunk telegraphers is only fair. He also announces that better wages will soon be granted on the Canada Atlantic Railway.

CANADA'S NEW KNIGHT.



Sir W. C. McDonald.

HITCHCOCK COMES AFTER BLISS.

The U. S. Ambassador to Russia to Become Secretary of the Interior.

Washington, D.C., Dec. 23.—At yesterday's Cabinet meeting the President stated that he had decided to appoint the present United States ambassador to Russia, Hon. Ethan Allan Hitchcock, as Secretary of the Interior, to succeed Mr. Bliss, who retires from that office upon the qualification of Mr. Hitchcock, which is expected to take place some time in February next.

The Cabinet discussed the instructions to be sent to Gen. Otis at Manila, which will be promulgated there as a proclamation by the President. These instructions are similar in import to those sent to the American officers at Santiago, upon the occupation of that city by the United States troops. They assure the Filipinos that the United States assumes military control of the Philippine Islands in a spirit of peace and friendship, and that all civil rights and privileges that they hitherto have enjoyed will be continued, and that it is the purpose of the Government to relieve in all possible way the unjust burdens that they have borne, and asks for the co-operation of all good citizens in maintaining order, to the end that peace and prosperity may be restored. So far as is practicable, all efficient civil officers will be retained in the official positions they now occupy, and fair and impartial justice will be administered to all.

The Cabinet also decided that existing conditions justified a further reduction of the military forces of the United States, and the Secretary of War was instructed to arrange for the immediate muster out of 50,000 volunteers. Several of the volunteer organizations in the Philippines undoubtedly will be included in the number.

MILLIONAIRE BAIN NEVER SLEPT.

For Sixteen Years He Did Not Sleep an Hour in His Bed—Dead.

Kenosha, Wis., Dec. 23.—Millionaire Edward Bain, president of the Bain Wagon Company, whose death was announced yesterday, was familiarly known as "the man who never slept." For the last 16 years he did not sleep an hour in his bed. Constant devotion to business was the cause of his sleeplessness. He was known to remain in his factory up to 16 years ago as late as 4 and 5 o'clock in the morning, and when he would seek rest he found it impossible to sleep. At that time he practically relieved himself of business cares.

For the greater part of the last ten years it was his custom to take daily trips to Chicago to pass the time away in street car riding. At night he was always to be found either at a theatre or billiard hall, which were the only places where he was able to get a short nap, the music at the theatres and the clicking of the billiard balls alone lulling him to sleep.

WARDEN FOSTER SUSPENDED.

The Minister of Justice Took Summary Action on Wednesday.

Moncton, N.B., Dec. 22.—A special from Dorchester says: A crisis has been reached in the investigation of the affairs of Dorchester Penitentiary by Commissioner Bill, which has been in progress for some days, such a strong prima facie case being made out that the Minister of Justice decided to suspend Warden Foster, the order being telegraphed yesterday. Deputy Warden Ross was temporarily placed in charge of the penitentiary. It is supposed that the charges against Warden Foster are to the effect that he violated penitentiary regulations.

Suicide at Vancouver.

SOBER FACTS...

ABOUT A LOT OF

BLACK FUR ROBES

A manufacturing firm that needed money badly had a big lot of Fur Robes—mostly Black Goats—dyed 'tis true, BUT ONLY IN THE HAIR NOT IN THE SKIN—skins are natural, consequently, as strong in the leather as it's possible to get Robes.

As said before we bought these under conditions altogether favourable and we now offer the entire lot at fully 25 per cent. less than their regular values.

$13 Robes for $9.50; $12 Robes for $8.50; $11 Robes for $8 and $10 Robes for $7.50.

We usually make all our own Robes of Goat, Mountain Bear, Yak, Buffalo and Musk Ox, but this was such a temptation we could not resist and now the offer is yours.

To whom it may concern we will sell from to-day or until cleared, this lot of Robes at these greatly reduced prices.

Regular stock starts as low as $5.00 for every Goat and ranges as high as $65.00 for Musk Ox.

THE WEST YORK TRIAL

Many Witnesses Contradict W. J. Wright on Wednesday.

CHARGE NO. 111 CONCLUDED.

A Very Nice Tangle for Their Lordships to Unravel—The Theory of the Respondent as to How the Chief Conservative Witness Became Possessed of Books—Must Finish Saturday.

Toronto, Dec. 22.—Charge 111, the peace de resistance of the Conservatives in the West York election trial, again occupied the attention of the court during all of yesterday. On this charge the case will likely stand or fall. The story of the chief witness for the Conservatives, Walter J. Wright, was contradicted in almost every particular yesterday. Witnesses swore to canvassing with the books he produced. They swore also that they were in their possession until the day of the election, when they were left at the Liberal headquarters at the Junction. The respondent's claim is that Wright found them there and appropriated them, fixing them up to suit his present story after the fiasco in which his evidence resulted at the former trial. If he had the books then, in the condition they are now, he would, it is argued, have produced them. The court intimated yesterday that the trial must either be finished by Saturday or go over until the spring. As their lordships have asked to have some shorthand notes on charge 111 extended, their judgment may be reserved.

In the morning Mr. Parsons produced a diary to disprove an allegation that Parsons called at Brown's on the eve of election and offered him a load of wood. The diary proved that it was on Feb. 28, not Feb. 28, that the call was made. William Parsons, jr., corroborated this.

Mr. H. E. Irwin indicated how he thought Wright could have got hold of the canvass books and direction cards. There were 800 of the latter and some 3,000 or 4,000 of the former, and people in the Junction had used them for notebooks.

Mr. Hill testified again that Wright was not an agent. He had called at Wright's store looking for a man named Newton, and Pearen did not enter the store.

Mr. J. M. Pearen identified one of the books as the one in which he had written the names in the Scarlet Plains committee rooms and given to Mr Bennett. He had never given Wright the books, never put him canvassing at Scarlet Plains. He was driving on one occasion to Lambton Mills, when he gave Wright a lift. They stopped at Gilchrist's greenhouse, and he left his satchel in the cutter, containing blank forms for scrutineer's appointments and voting lists. Witness said none of his appointments were headed: "West York Liberal campaign," as was one produced, which Wright said witness gave him. He described Mrs. Wright's visit to his house. He had told her to go away and send her husband, as he did not know her.

Witness did not know what particulars Mr. Irwin had regarding Wright's knowledge till the particulars of the protest were filed. Witness did not at first know who wrote "open voter" opposite Brown's name on the inside scrutineer's list. Then he identified it as his own, but further would not say it was not Mr. A. J. Anderson's writing. He identified his writing "open voter" opposite another name, but not the word "negro."

The next witness was Mr. William Bennett, who was canvassing for Mr. Hill at Scarlet Plains. He got "a blue kind of pink book." He saw some on the list, and some he didn't see. Witness was shown the book, and said there had been other names written in the book since he gave it back. His own name was written first. He had met Mr. Walter J. Wright, but he had a black book, and as witness had a pink book, he asked Wright whom he was for. Wright replied: "I am out for Hill." This was at 3 o'clock on the day before the election. If a number of people would say that Wright was in Lambton Mills at this time witness said they would be mistaken. He had left his canvass book in the committee room, he didn't know whom with, telling them to give it to Mr. Pearen.

Mr. James Bagge was given a list of voters to look up for the drivers. The names were printed and he put an "O" for all right and a cross for those against. Mr. Pearen also made marks in the book. He was the last voter on election day, and saw Wright and Jackson with a number of pink books. He and Wright and Jackson went over the books inside the house. Witness saw Mr. Wright the night before the election in the Junction. He had never seen him before. Wright had never canvassed him.

Mr. Cameron had seen Mr. W. J. Wright in the outside committee room the night before the election, and Wright said in a conversation that he was going to Fairbank the next day. He had seen Wright in the committee room only twice.

Mr. John Mason lived in No. 12 subdivision and voted there. Mr. Wright had never canvassed him, contrary to Mr. Wright's evidence.

Mr. Irwin on the stand testified to having received the scrutineer's list last night from Mr. Anderson, brother of A. J. Anderson. The existence of the book was suggested to him by Mr. Pearen.

Mrs. I. Livings was from Carleton, and said she went with Mrs. Wright to Mr. Pearen's house. They had a talk, which she did not hear. This concluded the evidence on charge 111.

The lawyers argued the case, but the judges had given no decision when the court adjourned for the day.

Suicide in a Church.

Boston, Dec. 22.—The members of the congregation of the Church of St. John the Evangelist, at the West End, who gathered for early service yesterday morning found the body of a young woman in one of the galleries. A bottle of muriatic acid lay beside her, pointing to suicide. The woman was Miss Margaret Dodge, a teacher in the Armenian school at the South End. It is thought despondency on account of illness led to the suicide.

All Covered With Eruptions—Could Not Work, the Suffering Was So Great—Hood's Has Cured.

"I was all run down with complaints peculiar to my sex, and I broke out in sores on my body, head, limbs and hands, and my hair all came out. I was under the doctor's treatment a long time without benefit. They called my trouble eczema. Finally I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after I had used three or four bottles I found I was improving. I kept on until I had taken several more bottles and the sores and itching have disappeared and my hair has grown out." MRS. J. G. BROWN, Brantford, Ontario.

"I was all run down and had no appetite. I had a tired feeling all the time. I was advised to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I did so and it benefited me so much that I would not be without it." MRS. G. I. BURNETT, Central Norton, N. B.

RECONSTRUCTION NEEDED.

The leading Conservative papers which keep themselves so busy trying to pick holes in the armour of the Liberal party, would be better employed in putting a few patches over the gaping rents in their own party mantle. That all is not as it should be with the Conservative party is not the imagination of the "unspeakable Grit" but is the deliberate conclusion of independent opinion and journals conducted by prominent members of the party.

The Ottawa Journal (Independent) says:

Nobody seems much surprised at the results of the Dominion bye-elections during the week. But the fact that the Conservatives can show no gain of ground despite the many criticisms to which the Liberal administration is justly open would seem to be an invitation to the Conservatives to shake up their leaders.

The Toronto Telegram (Conservative) also remarks:—

As for the general result of the federal bye elections, the Laurier Government has been substantially endorsed and, though bye-elections usually go with the government, the Conservatives can find in the result no encouragement for the assertions that the country is tiring of Liberal rule. The result is a hint to the Conservatives to to set about the reconstruction of the party.

If the chief organs would drop "Tarte," "Sifton" and "Mulock" during the holidays, at least, and elaborate a Christmas box of some good advice for their party leaders, something might come of it. As it is they are running their addled pates against a stone wall, buttressed by public opinion.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE tramp problem has for a long time been a good deal of trouble, but it promises to solve itself if the tramps take to shooting each other instead of the guardians of the peace. The shooting of one tramp by another at Paris a day or two ago is a new departure which, except for the value of human life in the abstract, is not much to be deplored—probably saved the hangman a job.

TIMES change. The literary fame of King James rests on his notorious "counterblast" on tobacco. His royal degredation of the weed is met by the royal approbation of Victoria the Good, who has ennobled tobacco by conferring the order of Knighthood on Mr. W. C. McDonald, the millionaire tobbacco manufacturer of Montreal. Sir Wm. McDonald's manufactured products may have gone up in very pleasant smoke, but the financial results have been liberall donated to the extension of the interests of education.

MONTREAL'S millionaire princes—for they deserve the name on account of their princely benefactions to McGill University—set a pace that might well be imitated by many Toronto millionaires in relation to another equally great educational institution—Toronto University. It's all very well for moneyed men to invest their wealth in manufactures, etc., such investments being direct dividends. But if a man puts his money to the use Sir William Macdonald did in erecting a mining school for McGill, he will do more to develop the untold mineral riches of Canada than if he helped float half a dozen great commercial enterprises. The training of the rising generation in the proper methods of search for mineral wealth is beginning at the right end, and will yield rich results.

THE Mail and Empire reprints with approval a would-be funny criticism by the Montreal Gazette, of the new Imperial postage stamp, to the effect that it is too big for a postage stamp and too small for a map. It is not so small as the Mail and Empire, which permits its political antipathy to go so far as to belittle a token of an event that is regarded as marking an era in the history of earth's greatest empire. A daughter of Roland Hill sends greetings and congratulations—"from the daughter of the English Roland Hill to the Canadian Roland Hill,"—Hon. Postmaster General Mulock. Unsophisticated British statesmen and prominent British citizens may think Mr. Mulock has done something to be proud of, but Canadian Journals of the calibre of the Mail and Empire seem to consider it good politics to belittle a great imperial achievement because they hope thereby to discredit a minister who is opposed to them in politics. No wonder the Conservative party is under a cloud, when its leading organs in two leading provinces descend to such petty tactics to elevate the standing of the party.

MR. MULOOK'S QUOTATION.

(Toronto World.)

There has been no end of discussion among literary people in Toronto and elsewhere as to where the Postmaster General got the quotation emblazoned on the new penny stamp. To set the point at rest the World gives the following quotation from Mr. Lewis Morris' "Songs of Britain." It is to be found on pp. 181-2 of the volume entitled "Song of Empire":

"We love not war, but only peace,
Yet never shall our England's power decrease!
Whoever guides our helm of state,
Let all men know it, England shall be great!
We hold a vaster Empire than has been!

Russian Royal Incomes.

No sovereign is so rich as the emperor of Russia, and no sovereign has such heavy calls upon his purse. The Grand Dukes Vladimir, Alexis, Serge and Paul Alexandrovitch, as well as the Grand Duke Michael Nicholajevitch, as the sons of emperors of Russia, receive from the head of the house an annual sum of 185,000 rubles, which, added to their private means, makes them very rich. The wives and widows of Russian grand dukes receive 40,000 rubles, their sons 150,000 rubles. It was the late Emperor Alexander III who made the rule that every member of the Russian imperial family must spend a part of the year in Russia or else lose a third of his or her allowance.—San Francisco Argonaut.

A Chinese View of Americans.

This is how a Chinese visitor in this country describes Americans in a Chinese paper: "They live months without eating a mouthful of rice; they eat bullocks and sheep in enormous quantities; they have to bathe frequently; they eat meat with knives and prongs; they never enjoy themselves by sitting quietly on their ancestors' graves, but jump around and kick balls as if paid to do it, and they have no dignity, for they may be found walking with women."

WILL BE TRIED FOR MURDER.

Daniel Stevens Found Against by the Coroner's Jury at Paris.

Paris, Dec. 22.—The jury empaneled to inquire into the death of the unknown man who was shot in the G.T.R. yards here rendered a verdict last night after being but ten minutes out, "That he met his death from a bullet fired from a revolver in the hands of Daniel Stevens on Dec. 20."

W. W. Hume, G.T.R. agent, and Richard Patterson, G.T.R. baggageman, dovetailed evidence to show that about 2.30 p.m. on Tuesday deceased had come into the waiting room swearing he had been robbed by two men and threatening vengeance. He had then gone out and a few minutes later the man Stevens had come down the platform. Mr. Hume being notified of the shooting, detained him in the baggageroom.

Mrs. W. T. Thompson was an eyewitness of the affair. Deceased had swung his arms at the prisoner in a threatening manner; a pistol shot had followed. Deceased had fallen and the other had walked around the station house with nothing, so far as she could see from her house, in his hands.

Chief of Police Green told how he had arrested the prisoner. He could not identify the dead man, but the Brantford police had located him as a man who, when in custody there on Saturday night, had given his name as James Kelly of Sarnia.

THE FIRE RECORD.

Fire on Wednesday destroyed 25 business houses and two residences in Malden, Mo. Loss, $80,000.

Twenty-two horses were burned in the fire at the big stable of the Newark branch of the New York Biscuit Company. Loss, $25,000.

Haldane & Co.'s printing office on Elgin street, Ottawa, was gutted by fire on Wednesday night. Loss, about $15,000 on plant and $5,000 on building.

The Greenshields fire Tuesday night turned out to be the heaviest Montreal has suffered for years, and the insurance companies suffer very heavily, the total insurance on the three burned properties being $912,000.

Important Discovery Made by Dr. Stanley Kent of London.

PRINCE GEORGE IS IN CRETE.

The Island at Last Rescued From Turkish Misrule—The Cretan Flag—Prince George Issues a Proclamation—Tactless Prosecution of Dr. Delbrueck for Denouncing the Russian Expulsions.

London, Dec. 22.—Dr. Stanley Kent of London has discovered a vaccine germ. This discovery is of the greatest importance, as its use in pure cultures removes the impure lymph which has been the cause of the widespread objection to vaccination.

May Be From Andree.

Moscow, Russia, Dec. 22.—Minister Hesterskiod, representative of Sweden and Norway at St. Petersburg, has received from M. Rossanowich, a Government employe in charge of the Siberian station at Slatoust, in the Ural Mountains, a bottle containing a brief message, which purports to be from Prof. Andree. The message, which is scrawled in French, reads:

"Balloon—We pass the Ural Mountains.

"Andree."

Rossanowich reports that the bottle was found in a snowdrift near Slatoust.

German Inspection Bill.

Berlin, Dec. 22.—The North German Gazette yesterday, in announcing that the Imperial meat inspection bill is now ready to be submitted to the Bundesrath, says: "The introduction of a uniform system of inspection has long been contemplated, and is purely a German affair, with which we alone are concerned."

END OF TURKISH MISRULE.

Prince George Arrives in Crete and Issues a Proclamation to the People—New Cretan Flag.

Canea, Island of Crete, Dec. 22,—Prince George of Greece, the high commissioner of the powers, arrived at Suda Bay yesterday, escorted by the British, French, Russian and Italian flagships. He was saluted by the forts, and was welcomed by immense crowds of people on landing. As soon as the Prince was ashore a procession was formed, and he came here. The Prince and his party stopped before the church, where a Te Deum was sung. He then proceeded to the Government Building, where the Cretan flag was hoisted and saluted by the warships.

The New Cretan Flag.

Paris, Dec. 22.—The four powers interested in the reconstruction of Crete have agreed upon the design of a Cretan flag. The ground is blue, traversed by two diagonal bands of white, forming a St. Andrew's cross. In the upper quarter, next to the staff, is a red field bearing a white five-pointed star, the red square being the symbol of the Sultan's sovereignty. The flag will be submitted to the Sultan and Cretans for approval.

A Proclamation Issued.

Canea, Dec. 22.—Prince George has issued a proclamation promising to govern with justice and impartiality, securing liberty to all without distinction.

PROSECUTING DELBRUECK.

Even the German Government Think a Mistake Has Been Made.

Berlin, Dec. 22.—The prosecution of Dr. Delbrueck, the well known professor of history in the Berlin University, on account of an article written by him denouncing the expulsion of Danes from Schleswig, is raising a considerable stir. The action of the Prussian Government is thrown into relief by Dr. Delbrueck's distinguished record. He was raised to officer's rank on the battlefield of Gravelotte for heroic conduct, and acted as tutor to the Emperor's deceased brother, Prince Waldemar. He was a member of the Reichstag for six years, but was too independent and advanced to please the reactionary element dominating the Government. He is a Conservative. Public feeling in the matter is sufficiently shown by the attitude of the press. It is not alone the Liberal papers which attack the Government hotly, but the Government's organs express themselves as scandalized by the action of the authorities.

The Cologne Gazette, Post, National Zeitung and Taglische Rundschau, all of which are staunch Conservative papers, and opposed to the Dr. Delbrueck's views, regret the Government's serious blunder, and express the hope that the prosecution will be dropped.

What Will Russia Do?

Berlin, Dec. 22.—The Russian Government now has felt the pinch of Prussian expulsions, and has joined with Austria and Denmark in protesting against the wholesale ejectment of Russian subjects from Prussian borders. The Riaski Trud of St. Petersburg and other Government organs are threatening that a continuation of the present Prussian policy will result in determined reprisal.

THE WEST INDIAN PROBLEM

Is Believed to Have Been Solved by the Co-Operative Union.

Kingston, Jamaica, Dec. 22.—London advices just received bring promise that the West Indian colonies will enter upon the new year with brighter industrial prospects, owing to the successful launching of West Indian Co-Operative Union, organized on the lines of the California Fruit Union and the Irish agricultural organization, which achieved wonderfully rapid success. Subsequently various local co-operative societies and banks will be established by the union. Important results in the direction of obviating the present disastrous economic deadlock are anticipated, the promoters realizing the fact that only artificial conditions hamper the profitable working of the natural resources, which two centuries of devotion to a single industry has obscured. This, together with Sir Thomas Lipton's sugar scheme, is regarded as satisfactorily solving the West Indian problem.

Soldiers to Fight Rats.

Brussels, Dec. 22.—An extraordinary plague of rats has broken out in Eastern Belgium. The rodents are destroying the granaries and have caused stampedes among the live stock. In several instances children have been attacked. The Government has ordered troops to assist the farmers in a war of extermination.

WHO GETS THE JOB OF KING?

Trouble Over the Successor to the Late King Malietoa.

Auckland, N.Z., Dec. 22.—Advices received here from Samoa, under date of Dec. 16, say there is serious trouble in connection with the election of a king to succeed the late King Malietoa. The supporters of Mataafa have become warlike, and it is reported that the German consul is supporting Mataafa, in spite of the agreement arrived at between the consuls to remain neutral and allow the chief justice to decide the question of succession. The foreign residents fear there will be an outbreak of tribal war when the chief justice pronounces his decision about the end of the year, and they are anxious for naval protection.

90,000 PEOPLE MET DEATH

Owing to Famine in the District of Yemen, Arabia.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 22.—A victory of the Turks over rebel natives in the district of Yemen, Arabia, is reported. The insurgents suffered heavy losses. The rebellion is the result of fanatic agitation.

Ninety thousand people have died recently from famine in the same region.

The Czar's advisers are uneasy over the situation in France, and are beginning to perceive dangers on the Franco-Prussian frontier. Some of them are urging an understanding with England, as a counter measure, and this is not improbable.

EGYPT WILL MOVE NOW.

The Sum of £980,000 Will Be Spent on Rolling Stock for Railways.

Cairo, Dec. 22.—The Egyptian Caisse de la Dette Publique has agreed to advance to the Egyptian railways the sum of £980,000 to procure rolling stock and other requirements within the next five years.

The Kaiser's Gifts.

Berlin, Dec. 22.—The Kaiser, who recently presented the Reichstag with a series of marine sketches by himself, taken on board the Hohenzollern, now presents it with a new series, collaborated with the marine painter Stower, and destined for the walls of the Reichstag. Critics say the gifts are intended to pave the way for a demand for further naval credits.

A NEW INVENTION

The Newcombe Piano Has It.

It consists of a Patented Practice CLAVIER or STOP which diminishes the tone when required and saves wear on the Piano; it also does away with the old way of having to press down the pedal with the foot in order to soften the tone when running the scales or practicing. Oftentimes the young pupil on the piano cannot press down on the pedal without throwing themselves out of the proper position when they should sit erect. This invention in the NEWCOMBE PIANO will enable children to begin two years earlier on the piano. In addition to the above, the NEWCOMBE PIANO is the finest made in Canada. Children often complain about practicing; they like it if they have a NEWCOMBE PIANO. 1898 styles are gems of art, containing every late improvement; they possess that beautiful full sweet tone which delights the singer, and so pleases every musical ear. Organs of every description at Wholesale Prices.

Big Bargains now on hand in slightly used. Upright and Square Pianos of the various makes taken in part exchange for the famous NEWCOMBE PIANOS. THIS MORNING'S FIRE.

The Freight Sheds at the C. P. R. Were Threatened.

This morning at about half-past nine o'clock the brigade was summoned to the C. P. R. station, the freightsheds being in danger of catching fire from a bon fire, which had been started near the track.

It seems that the ground was littered with oily waste and soaked with the drippings of oil from the axles of the cars. An employee conceived the brilliant idea of setting fire to the debris. The oily refuse could not be extinguished after being ignited and to prevent the fire spreading to the freight sheds the brigade had to be called out.

MERRY WEDDING BELLS.

MISS EDITH SHORTLY MARRIED THIS AFTERNOON.

The Groom is Mr. J. E. Kavanagh, of Brantford. Formerly of the Local Collegiate Institute Staff.

An exceedingly pretty wedding, and one in which a great deal of interest has been manifested during the past few months, took place at half past one this afternoon at the residence of Mr. Benjamin Shortly, No. 550 Aylmer street, when his only daughter, Miss Edith, was united in marriage to Mr. J. E. Kavanagh, of Brantford.

The ceremony, which was performed by Rev. W. R. Young, of Port Hope, formerly of Peterborough, assisted by Rev. S. J. Shorey, pastor of the George street Methodist church, took place in the drawing room, which was tastefully decorated with flowers for the occasion, the fireplace being banked with ferns and foliage plants.

The bride wore a very handsome gown of white taffeta silk, with a very tasteful garniture of chiffon in love knot design. She carried a shower bouquet of Marechal Neil roses. The bridesmaid was Miss Helen Mason, who wore white organdie, relieved with a pink sash, and carried a basket of handsome La France rosese.

The groom was assisted by Mr. Orville B. Shortly, of Montreal, brother of the bride.

Master Harold Young of Port Hope, and Master Aleck McAllister assisted in the ceremony as page boys and looked very sweet indeed in their pretty costumes of black velvet with white satin vests and real lace collars. Each carried a basket of roses.

At the conclusion of the ceremony the assembled guests to the number of about thirty-five, sat down to the wedding dejeuner, which was served by Long Bros.

The gift of the groom to the bride was a gold brooch in crescent design, set with pearls. To the bridesmaid he gave a solitaire pearl ring, to the groomsman a pair of gold cuff links, and to the two little pages gold stick pins set with garnets. The groomsman presented the bride with a Heintzman upright piano in mahogany finish.

Mr. and Mrs. Kavanagh left on the afternoon train for Toronto and Newmarket, where they will spend Christmas. The bride's going-away dress was of brown broadcloth, trimmed with sable.

Mrs. Kavanagh will be at home on and after January 16th at No. 226 Wellington street, Brantford.

Mr. Kavanagh was formerly a resident of Peterborough, having held a position on the staff of the Collegiate Institute during the temporary absence of Mr. O'Brien, whilst the latter took a special course at Queen's University. Mr. Kavanagh is now in charge of a prosperous insurance business in Brantford, and is to be congratulated upon winning one of Peterborough's most charming daughters. By her sincerity and unaffected manner the bride has surrounded herself by a large circle of friends in town, by whom she will be greatly missed.

THE CIVIC ELECTIONS.

Modesty of Candidates—Backward in Coming Forward.

There is very little appearing on the surface to show that any interest is being taken in the municipal elections. Candidates are slow to declare themselves, and in many cases the acceptance of a candidate is contingent on so many circumstances, that may or may not arise, that it is difficult to get declarations of intentions.

However it is extremely probable that there is a strong under-current of deliberation that may result in the bringing out of several good and strong candidates. Of these some have had previous municipal experience, and have made excellent representatives and there is strong hopes that in some cases they may allow themselves to be placed in nomination. At present it is inadvisable to mention any names, as little that is definite can be said. These and other gentlemen will, however, have to speedily make up their minds, as nomination takes place on Monday, at the town council chamber. The nominations all take place at one point, since ward representation is abolished and councillors are elected in the same manner as the mayor.

SPORTING PASTIMES.

Interesting Items of Local and General Interest.

HOCKEY.

There were a large number of spectators at the rink last evening to witness the hockey practice. The ice was soft but the boys had a good "work out."

At a meeting of the Executive the attendance was most encouraging. Secretary Kerr read a number of communications from different clubs regarding games. The Aberdeen's, of Ottawa, asked for January 7th as a date for playing in Peterborough, but as Saturday is not a good night for a match they were invited to come on the Friday previous. It is hardly probable that both Winnipeg teams will play in Peterborough this winter, but the club is almost sure of having one of the western seniors. The secretary was instructed to try and make arrangements with Belleville for a game here next week. Rubbing tables will be ordered for the players at once, and placed in the dressing room.

Lionel King left for Toronto this afternoon to attend a meeting of the O. H. A. Executive called to revise the schedule. It seems that after the Executive arranged the games to the satisfaction of the members the sub-committee changed the schedule to suit themselves. The matter will be rectified to-night.

"Bunty" Armstrong, the well known Orillia lacrosser, will venture a career on hockey skates. It is thought he will develop into a fine player.

The Globe says: The wildest kind of rumors were flying around yesterday about the alleged trouble in the O. H. A., most of them so absurd that it is hard to imagine who would be so foolish as to give them credence. It is quite true there is a little dissatisfaction over the schedules but nothing of a serious nature, and in all probability the changes desired by the disgruntled clubs will be granted in a measure at to-night's meeting of the Executive. One report that gained currency was that the Association was on the verge of disruption, the senior clubs having decided to withdraw, but as far as this story is concerned, it is not even tinged with truth. The clubs know when they are well off, and there is not the remotest possibility of their seceding.

The Frontenacs, of Kingston, play in Belleville on Monday, opening the new rink. Arrangements might be made to bring them on to Peterborough for a match Tuesday night.

Billy Ponton will play with the Frontenacs. The team asks $125 to go to Guelph for a game, provided the receipts above this sum go to the Ponton defence fund.

CURLIANA.

Mr. Thos. Rutherford is making a neat job of the new club room at the rink, having been awarded the contract for erecting the same.

The ice was heavy at the rink last night and there were not many curlers out. One game was played with the following result:—

Geo Kerr,	H Phelan,
Alf Terrill,	Gus Hay,

TO AVOID ANCHOR ICE.

Metropolitan Co. Have a Novel Scheme —Purpose Taking Advantage of the Fact That Anchor Ice Does not Form in Ice-covered Water.

Ottawa Journal.

The Metropolitan Electric Company have arranged a scheme whereby their proposed water power at Britannia will be free from anchor ice during winter. When constructed this will be the only water power on the Ottawa river free from anchor ice. The company have taken advantage of the fact that anchor ice does not form under surface ice. The canal for concentrating the water, which is to be built of crib-work, will go partly through a point of land jutting out into the rapids and partly through the rapids, and will be constructed with the object of having surface ice form. The canal's supply of water will be drawn from Lake Deschenes at a point where water is still. The water at the foot of the canal will also be still, and thus the current of water in the canal will be slow enough to allow the surface of the canal to freeze.

If the light supplied to Ottawa by the Metropolitan Company ever becomes dimmed it will be from some other cause, it is expected, than anchor ice.

[This is a matter of no small importance to Peterborough where the formation of anchor ice is liable affect our water supply and our supply of electric light and electric power.

ORDAINED TO THE PRIESTHOOD.

At St. James Cathedral, Montreal, Rev. J. J. O'Brien, of Peterborough, son of Mr. Edward O'Brien, Park street, who has been completing his theological studies at the Grand Seminary, Montreal, was ordained to the priesthood. The ordination ceremonies, which were conducted by Rt. Rev. Archbishop Bruchesi, were unusually solemn and impressive, not only intrinsically but by reason of the large number of ordinandi, which numbered, including the several orders, about one hundred and thirty.

Rev. Father O'Brien was born in town, and was educated at the Separate and High Schools here, taking classics with the late Mr. F. J. Lynch and completing his literary course at St. Michael's College, Toronto. The course in Philosophy and Theology was taken at the Grand Seminary under the Sulpician Fathers. Rev. Father O'Brien sang his first solemn high mass in the Grand Seminary, Montreal, on Sunday last. Rev. Father O'Brien is at the cathedral at present. Rev. Father O'Brien's many friends congratulate him on the success that has followed his studies and on their culmination in the dignity of the priesthood.

KISS AND BE FRIENDS.

When my Mollie and I get cross,
As the kindest of couples will do,
I never say "this is my right,"
Or "thus and so" you should do.
Very easy a quarrel begins,
But in body knows how it ends;
A far better way is simply to say,
"Dear Mollie, let's kiss and be friends."

Sometimes with a friend I remain—
Remain till it's late in the night—
And though Mollie is sure to complain,
I know very well she is right:
But I've found that defending myself
In an argument only ends;
That a far better way is simply to say:
"Come Mollie, dear, kiss and be friends."

And Mollie has cooled my plan,
And whenever I have to wait,
Whenever my papers are lost,
Or breakfast is hurried or late,
When I'm angry and ready to scold,
She says nothing and no one defends,
But takes my own way, and whispers, "I say,
My darling, let's kiss and be friends."

When husbands at such a small cost
Their peace and their pleasure can buy,
Can make their wives happy and calm,
I wonder that more do not try
The power of a few loving words
When quarrel or worry impends;
For they'd get their own way if only they'd say:
"Come darling, let's kiss and be friends."

A Narrow Escape.

Thankful words written by Mrs. Ada E. Hart, of Groton, S.D.: "Was taken with a bad cold which settled on my lungs; cough set in and finally terminated in consumption. Four doctors gave me up, saying I could live but a short time. I gave myself up to my Saviour, determined, if I could not stay with my friends on earth, I would meet my absent ones above. My husband was advised to get Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. I gave it a trial, took in all eight bottles. It has cured me, and thank God, I am saved and now a well and healthy woman." Sold by all druggists, 50 cts. and $1.00. Guaranteed or price refunded.

What is Scott's Emulsion?

It is the best cod-liver oil, partly digested, and combined with the hypophosphites and glycerine. What will it do? It will make the poor blood of the anæmic rich and red.

It will give nervous energy to the overworked brain and nerves. It will add flesh to the thin form of a child, wasted from fat-starvation.

It is everywhere acknowledged as The Standard of the World.

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

Booth's Great Recitation That Thrilled and Fascinated His Auditors.

"I think the most thrilling experience I ever passed through was in New York city one time," said James O'Neil, "when, quite by accident, a number of foreign diplomats from Washington, a few American statesmen, some prominent New Yorkers and one or two of us professionals were gathered together in a smoking room of a well known hotel, and somebody asked Booth, who by the merest chance happened to be there, if he would not repeat the Lord's Prayer for the assemblage. I was sitting not far from the tragedian when he fixed his eyes upon the man who made the request. I think that it was Lord Sackville West, at that time British minister to the United States, and I shall never forget the peculiarly searching expression that Booth shot out of his dark eyes. They seemed to penetrate the very soul of the man at whom they were directed, and then, as if satisfied, resumed their wonted vacuous density.

"We were all breathless with anxiety—at least I was—for seldom would he recite off the stage, but at length he arose, walked to a little cleared space at one end of the room and began a recital that even after all these years makes me thrill through and through. He said: 'Our Father,' and never before had those two words been clothed with the majesty and reverence with which his look and tone enveloped them. And then he carried us into celestial regions, our spirits seeming to leave our bodies and to follow his behest. He lowered us into depths too dark for Dante's genius to conceive or Dore's pen to portray. The power exerted over us was simply unnatural. His musically resonant tones sounded slowly through the room, and as he swayed his lithe body we unconsciously followed his motion. It was something horrible, beautiful, terrible, fascinating—I cannot find words in the language to express it. There are none.

"I would not go through the scene again for a thousand works, and yet if I had the opportunity I would brave any danger to hear it once more. Do you understand? Those few score words as delivered by Edwin Booth were the most powerful argument for Christianity I ever heard, and could every being on the face of the globe have heard them there would no longer be atheism. Booth strode out of the room when he had finished, and a simultaneous sigh of relief arose, while without a word we stole away singly and on tiptoe, and I do not believe that any of us think of that thrilling evening without a shudder. He was a great man, a great man."—Lewiston Journal.

RECIPROCITY.

Free Fish and Free Lumber Will Not Be Down on the Bill According to the Montreal Herald.

Montreal, Dec. 21.—The Herald (Government) publishes the following special, dated Washington, Dec. 20:

Those of the Canadian members of the joint high commission who did not leave Washington early this morning for their homes, spent the morning in saying adieus to friends, and in preparing to depart this afternoon and to-night. There is a feeling among some of them that the negotiations thus far have not been altogether favorable to Canada, but the brief January session of the commissioners will be used to correct some of the matters which are least satisfactory.

The fact has developed that at yesterday's meeting the American members took the initiative in every proposal, and these propositions were not always most generous. In fact, there was an evident tendency among the American members to use the whip hand, as it Canada's representatives were more eager than they for an international agreement, which certainly is not the case.

At the session yesterday some definite propositions were made in regard to the reciprocity schedule, which were to be taken into consideration by the Canadians during the holiday recess. It seems to be settled that Canada will be given free coal, but that is an item of least importance to the United States. Free lumber assuredly has not been granted. The United States commissioners agree to pay Canada about $500,000 for her claim in the Behring Sea. The Canadian proposition for free fish is rejected unjustifiably, and finally, probably. Canada grants the United States the right to build and maintain warships on the lakes, which was a concession, of course, on the part of the northern neighbors of the States.

MURDER AT PARIS.

One Tramp Instantly Kills Another at the G.T.R. Station.

Paris, Ont., Dec. 21.—Yesterday afternoon an unknown man rushed through the waiting room at the Grand Trunk station, cursing and swearing. He was apparently a tramp, and had been drinking. Saying he had been robbed, he accosted another of the wandering fraternity, a man with curly hair, who was on the platform, and asked regarding the whereabouts of a third party, who was a short distance up the track. He turned and rushed at the man between the rails, who had a revolver in readiness and deliberately shot his assailant through the head, the ball entering the mouth and coming out behind the right ear. Death was almost instantaneous.

Two boys, Norman Lamb and Ernie Stewart, witnessed the tragedy, and called to Baggageman Paterson, who, with Station Agent Hume, gave chase after the murderer. Mr. Hume detained him at the station while Chief Green was sent for, and the body of the murdered man was brought into the same room, but Stevens (that is the name the shooter gave) made no reference to the crime, and he absolutely refused to talk about it.

When Chief Green arrived at the station he arrested another tramp, James Walker, who was some distance down the track. Walker denied any knowledge of the tragedy. Walker conversed with Stevens in the cells. The latter was overheard to say that he had thrown the revolver into the closet at the station. The weapon was found there by the police. It is a 32-calibre, six-chamber British bulldog, and contained three cartridges, one of which had been discharged.

The body of the murdered man lies in the town morgue. There was on his person nothing to lead to his identification.

Coroner Sinclair opened an inquest last night, and an adjournment was made till to-night, no evidence being taken.

AN ENDLESS CHAIN.

Of Kidney Diseases Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Ingersoll, Dec. 12—The newspapers throughout the Dominion published, last week, reports of the almost miraculous recovery of Mr. Michael Sherlock, after a prolonged illness with Kidney, Bladder and Urinary troubles. Mr. Sherlock's recovery was due solely to his use of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

This week another case is reported. Mr. G. J. Cook, a farmer living in West Oxford township, states that Dodd's Kidney Pills cured him of Kidney Disease and Lame Back, after he had suffered for over a year.

Thus it goes. The report of each cure by Dodd's Kidney Pills, brings another to light. Dodd's Kidney Pills have formed an immense endless chain of cures all round the Dominion. They have not failed once.

OTTAWA NOTES.

Remembrance to Hon. Wm. Mulock—A Colony From Illinois.

Ottawa, Dec. 20.—The trial of Dr. B. S. Stackhouse of Hull for giving Victoria Taylor a drug to produce an abortion was resumed again yesterday.

Hon. William Mulock has received a beautiful calendar from Mrs. Eleanor Fellows of London, England, with the following inscription "From the daughter of the English Roland Hill to the Canadian Roland Hill, with hearty good wishes for Christmas and New Year, and a long and useful career in the service of his country."

The immigration branch of the Department of the Interior has under consideration the establishment of a colony from Illinois in the Great Slave Lake country.

Why Uncle Sam Gets It.

London, Dec. 21.—The Pall Mall Gazette says that the Midland Railway Company has been compelled to order the construction of 20 freight locomotives in the United States, owing to the large number of advance orders held by the English locomotive works.

COMES TO THE AID OF

Catarrh Sufferers

SUCCESS in life is almost impossible for a man with bad breath. Nobody wants to do business with him. Nobody wants to associate with him. He is handicapped everywhere. Offensive breath comes from Catarrh; sometimes from Catarrh of the Stomach, sometimes of the lungs, sometimes of the head, nose, and throat. It is from Catarrh somewhere, and Catarrh is another name for uncleanness.

Many men understand this, and make every effort to cure it, but it is beyond the reach of ordinary practice.

No self-respecting man can ignore Catarrh. If he has it in any form he makes constant effort to be rid of it.

There is something about the manner of life and the climate of Canada that seems to breed diseases of the mucous membrane. Medical science ordinarily doesn't try to cure Catarrh; it "relieves" it; but Dr. Chase has been curing Catarrh for over thirty years, and his name is blessed by thousands who have shaken off the grasp of this insidious disease.

CHINESE IDEAS OF WAR.

They Have Never Held Military Art In Good Repute.

M. Leon de Rosny has made a curious communication respecting the ideas of the Chinese concerning war. Although it has often been necessary for the Chinese to engage in war, the military art has never been in good repute among them. In their view every war is a misfortune, if not a sin. They avoid talking to their children of laurels, crowns and triumphs won in war, but teach in their schools that the most glorious battles are at bottom simply homicides, abominable disasters to both parties

An emperor who decides to sacrifice numerous existences on a field of slaughter is reputed an unwise and unjust prince. A general who has won a battle ought to wear mourning for the quantity of blood his success has cost. These doctrines are not gross or immoral, but in the existing conditions of society generous thoughts are not without some inconvenience, and it is easy to understand, how with such ideas concerning war the Middle Kingdom has been conquered sometimes by peoples of no great importance and not very well armed

Nevertheless it is a curious ethnographical fact that whenever the Chinese people have been conquered they have absorbed their conquerors to their almost entire disappearance. The successors of the Mantchoo conquerors are now reigning in China, and it can hardly be said that any Mantchoos exist in Asia. Those who serve are treated at the court like slaves, while the powers are very careful not to show any lack of respect to the Chinese. The Manchu language, in spite of efforts to give it some literary and political importance, has been thrown into the background and is hardly more than one of the rude jargons of central Asia.—Popular Science Monthly.

A Culinary Failure.

She had just come from Castle Garden It took only half a look to tell that she originally came from the Emerald Isle and was absolutely ignorant of the wonderful things there are to be seen in America. says the Chicago Journal.

Although she was green, she looked as if she might learn, and a woman on Michigan avenue engaged her as maid of all work within a short time after her arrival in Chicago.

There were many minor mishaps, which were overlooked, and Mrs. McPherson was beginning to feel encouraged over the prospects of having a good girl in the course of time.

One day she had a watermelon sent up. It was duly delivered at the kitchen door.

Not long before dinner Nora came to the door of the sitting room.

"Miss McPherson," she said, "I've been a-cookin that big aig an a-cookin it, an sure I can't do nawthin with it. Won't you be afther comin out in the kitchen an lookin at it?"

THE RED CROSS.

They, too, have heard the drumbeat,
They follow the bugle's call,
These who are swift with pity
On the field where brave men fall.

When the battle boom is silent
And the echoing thunder dies,
They haste to the plain red sodden
With the blood of sacrifice.

The flag that floats above them
Is marked with a crimson sign,
Pledge of a great compassion
And the rifted heart divine

That once for man's redemption
Knew earth's completest loss—
These to the field of valor
Bring love's immortal cross.

And so they follow the bugle
And heed the drumbeat's call,
But their errand is one of pity—
They succor the men who fall.
—Harper's Bazar.

Farming In Olden Times.

The Romans were the first people to practice plowing between the rows of wheat as we do between corn. The idea was suggested in a singular manner. A warlike tribe, having ravished a section of land at the base of the Alps, undertook to destroy the growing crops by plowing them up, but instead it was found that the rows accidentally hilled were twice as large as those that were not. The harrow or hoe used by the Chinese farmer is of the rudest construction. The plow is usually drawn by women of the lowest classes.

Two hundred and fifty years ago, when the corn stolen from the Indians by our Puritan ancestors was planted in the sand of Cape Cod, the only instrument used was a ponderous and ill shaped Dutch hoe, which required a heavy man to handle at all. Our first processes were not much in advance of those of the barbarians of central Europe. Today we number several hundred tools, from the most delicate to the splendid specimen of the combined reaper and thrasher, which cuts, thrashes, winnows and bags grain at the rate of hundreds of bushels per day.

HUMAN SACRIFICES

On the Altar of Diabetes, Saved by Dodd's Kidney Pills, Only.

Hardly a family in the country is free from Diabetes. Great thirst, failing sight, numbness in the thighs, bleeding gums, swollen ankles, emaciation, nervous ness, pale or turbid urine, loss of sexual power, decaying teeth, pains in the loins or small of the back, are all positive signs that Diabetes is in the system.

Do you know how it ends? In Death. A premature, horrible, agonized, pitiful death. The victim has no peace, no ease in life. His days are filled with tortures. His nights are waking dreams of agony. He longs to die, yet fears the terrors of his end. He dies, a bloated, fetid, repulsive mass of corruption. That is the only end of unchecked Diabetes. Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure it. They drive it out of the system thoroughly, create new, clean blood, rebuild the diseased kidneys, and restore robust health.

HEALTHY, HAPPY WOMEN.

Pain and Weakness Banished through the use of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

It's sad to think that so many women are dragging out a miserable existence—suffering from pain, Weak Spells, Heart Palpitation, Sinking Sensations, Nervousness, Sleeplessness—who could be restored to the full enjoyment of perfect health by a few boxes of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

There can be no question about the efficacy of this remedy. Thousands of Canadian women, have tested it, found it do all that is claimed for it. Here is the testimony of Mrs. Gillen, Wesley Street, Moncton, N.B., who says:

"Before taking Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills I used to suffer untold agony from violent throbbing headaches, irregular action of the heart, together with pains or spasms in various parts of my body.

"Sometimes I felt so weak that I was unable to look after my domestic duties. However, I had to endure this worry and trouble, because all the remedies I tried failed to give me relief, until happily I heard of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I had only been taking them a short time when I felt greatly benefited. This encouraged me to continue their use until a complete cure was effected.

"I have not been troubled with a headache since taking these pills. They increased my appetite, invigorated my entire system, and gave me back my old time strength and vigor."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills never fail to cure Palpitation, Skip Beats, Smothering Sensation, Dizzy and Faint Spells, Weakness, Nervousness, Female Troubles, etc. Sold by all druggists at 50c. a box, or 3 for $1.25. T. MILBURN & Co., Toronto, Ont.

Take a Laxa-Liver Pill before retiring. They'll work while you sleep without a grip or gripe, and make you feel better in the morning. Sold by all druggists.

"IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY."

To Wm. McCabe, Esq., Managing Director, North American Life Assurance Co., Toronto:

DEAR SIR,—Your official notice came duly to hand, appraising me of the results obtainable upon my 15 year endowment Policy in your Company for $1,000, which matured on the 8th inst. Of the various options you have given me viz.:

Cash value	$1,564 96
Paid-up Policy, payable at my death, for	2,560 00
Yearly Income for life of—	166 20

I have decided upon the cash value; and it gives me pleasure to testify that, as I anticipated it would be when I took out the policy, IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY. This returns me the full premiums of the 15 years and over 4½ per cent. compound interest, in addition to which you have carried the risk upon my life. In view of the lowering rates of interest which have been obtainable during the latter portion of the period, it is difficult to see how this excellent result could have been surpassed.

Yours sincerely,

A Woman's Crime.

A THRILLING STORY OF LOVE AND ADVENTURE.

By LAWRENCE M. LYNCH.

Author of "John Arthur's Ward," "The Diamond Coterie," "Against Odds," Etc., Etc.

Without being able to tell just now it happened, Clarence Arteveldt found himself walking beside Jess Warren. He was scarcely able to conceal his chargrin at his arrangement, but Mrs. Warren chatted carelessly, until the two girls were left out of hearing, then she looked up in his face and said, with her most sympathetic smile :—

"Shall I guess your thoughts, Mr. Arteveldt ?"

Clarence looked annoyed.

"You are thinking of Lenore," said pussy-cat, softly, "and no wonder; she is a sweet girl. Take my advice, sir, and don't lose too much time. Half the men who have seen her are wild about her."

"But what can I do ?" said Clarence, thrown completely off his guard.

"Do ! why make sure of her at once. Don't let some one else come in ahead of you."

"Mrs. Warren," said he, suddenly, "do you think she cares for me ?"

"How should I know ?" laughed the widow. "I would tell you if I could. I like you both, and would like to see you both happy."

"If you could only find out for me," he said, eagerly. "If you could say to me, 'Clarence, I know she loves you,' I would give you anything. I would give thousands for a word of hope !"

"Foolish boy," purred the widow. "Do you mean to say that if I could tell you how to win Lenore Armyn, you would give me—say, five thousand dollars ?"

"I do ! I do ! Only tell me how, and it is yours."

"Listen !" said the woman, moving nearer to him. "I will go and draw off Kate Seaton. Then do you propose to Lenore Armyn without loss of time. If she refuses you—but of course she won't—I promise that she shall unsay her words. She shall be your wife. I can tell you how to win her, and I will."

"Are you in earnest ?"

"Perfectly so. If you want my help, do as I say; if you don't, we will drop the subject."

"But if she refuses me ?"

"If she refuses you I will meet you this evening, say at seven o'clock. I will go over to Miss VanBuren's and you must call there; then you can offer to escort me home, and I will tell you how to win a wife."

She turned abruptly and called to the girls. In a few moments the positions were reversed, and Clarence Arteveldt had the opportunity he had longed for and dreaded.

Jess found no other chance to speak to him, but his face, as they drove toward home, was not a happy one. As he assisted her from the carriage he whispered in her ear :—"I will call at Miss VanBuren's to-night at seven," and Jess Warren entered the house with a triumphant smile upon her lips.

Miss VanBuren's dwelling was nearly a block from the Ruthvens', and an hour later saw the widow and Carrie VanBuren standing in its doorway. They had been in close consultation for more than an hour, and Mrs. Warren was taking her leave.

"You are sure there is no risk ?" asked Miss VanBuren, with a foxy look in her eyes.

"Perfectly sure; if you can manage your part as you say you can."

"Oh ! that is easy."

"Then the rest will be. Leave me to talk him over. I know just how to do it. His love is perfectly selfish; he will do anything to gain the girl. Trust me to manage him. Our parts will be simple; we have only to look on, be perfectly surprised, and as indignant as we like—and pocket a thousand dollars each."

"I'll do it," said Miss VanBuren, with an emphatic nod; "it's worth some risk." And the pussy-cat went home, content and purring.

CHAPTER XII.

SPRINGING THE TRAP.

Nearly a week elapsed before the plotters found a suitable opportunity for putting their scheme into execution. Not that it had taken so long to persuade Clarence Arteveldt. For the first time in his gay, dissolute life, that young man had found himself thwarted. For the first time he had found a woman who could be insensible to the charms of his person—and purse.

Under the skilful manipulations of Jess Warren, all the worst passions, the lowest and most selfish elements, of an almost selfish nature, arose and asserted themselves. The widow knew her man. She understood him as he did not understand himself. He was as wax in her hands. And yet Clarence Arteveldt would have scoffed at the idea of being managed—and that by a woman.

"You have but one flaw in Lenore's eyes," said the artful woman, when, on the evening preceding the day destined to inaugrate a tragedy in the lives of the lover and the unloving, they were rehearsing their programme for the last time—"while she admires your charms of person and manner, and acknowledges you socially perfect, she asserts that you are lacking in force, that you are too prosaic; in short, not enough like a hero in a novel or a knight in a play. Only yesterday she said to Kate, who, by the by, is a great fool, 'It is no wonder that love seems out of date, when men woo with bouquets and opera boxes, and hobnob the ones who slander their sisters. What man would fight for a woman now ? One might love a knight who would overcome all obstacles to win the lady of his choice if only for his very bravery, but sighing swains who accept their conge, and then grow misanthropical on champagne and smoke—bah, I don't admire them !' Mark my words, Clarence, give her a taste of the romantic, once show her that you are in earnest, and she will forgive you, and love you into the bargain. I know it."

This suppesed speech of Lenore Armyn's—considering that it emanated from the ont over-eloquent brain of Mrs. Warren—produced a marked effect upon the young man, and added new strength to his already sufficiently firm resolve.

"She shall find out whether I am a mere carpet knight, or not," he muttered, as valiantly as if about to storm a city. "Everything is settled then. You say that Jeff does not know ?"

"Jeff knows that we are coming to dine with him, and that we are to bring a lady friend. Also, that you are to be of the party. He told Carrie that he should invite some young fellow, a friend of his, and we didn't dare object, of course. He seemed unusually glad to give this little dinner party; said that he expected to enjoy himself very much."

"But he doesn't know—"

"How exceedingly ignorant and unsophisticated Miss Armyn is ! What a question ! You know that if he did he would soon spoil our plans."

"But he won't kick afterward ?"

"Not he. Jeff is too philosophical for that."

There had stood in the way of their success a formidable obstacle in the shape of Miss Kate Seaton. But a way had been found to dispose of her, a way that made the introduction of a new confederate necessary.

Luckily for the plotters, Clarence Arteveldt could suggest an improvement here. His friend, almost shadow, George Fordham, had been assigned an outside part in the plot. Clarence suggested that Fordham be the man who should keep Kate Seaton from doing mischief, and at the same time make the girl an unconscious abettor to their vile ends. To this end Fordham, who was but slightly acquainted with the Ruthvens, and who had not been included in the litle gathering that welcomed Lenore Armyn to the city, must put himself upon an easier footing among them.

In a home where the formalities were so little observed, this was not a difficult matter. During the week that intervened between the hatching of the plot and the execution thereof, Clarence Arteveldt was, as usual, an almost daily visitor at the Ruthvens, and his intimate friend, George Fordham, two or three times accompanied him, on which occasions he, Fordham, devoted himself almost exclusively to Kate Seaton.

Kate's admirers were not numerous, and the courteous attentions of the good-looking young reporter were not unwelcome to her; and when, one day, the very last in the month of September, the landau of Clarence Arteveldt, and a light carriage, driven by Fordham, and drawn by a handsome pair of bays, drew up before the door, she was as eager as any for a drive.

It happened that Miss Carrie VanBuren had dropped in, and straightway, with much gay badinage and laughter, the driving party was formed, Mr. Fordham and Kate Seaton driving away in the smaller conveyance, and Mr. Arteveldt with Lenore, Jess, and Miss VanBuren in the landau.

There had been from the first an antipathy between Miss Buren and Lenore Armyn, not manifest in the words or manner of either, but felt to a certain extent by both. It seemed there could be nothing in common between the two. But Miss VanBuren was a prime favourite with all the Ruthven household, was second only to Lenore's self, and Lenore Armyn was not the girl to give expression to her dislike for the friend of her friends.

The day was exhilarating, and the party in high spirits. They had driven about for more than an hour, during which time Mr. Fordham, for some reason, had allowed his bays to fall behind the landau, when suddenly the gushing Miss VanBuren uttered a little shriek of rapture, and leaned forward, clapping of her gloved hands, while she said :—

"Oh, girls ! such a splendid idea. Let's stop and surprise Uncle Jeff ! Let's make him give us one of his splendid bachelor dinners ! That will finish off our drive and add a spice to it."

Jess Warren turned a beaming face toward Lenore.

"Do let's !" she said, appealingly. "Carrie's uncle is such a jolly old bachelor, and his rooms a exquisite, such books, such pictures; won't it be fine, Mr. Arteveldt ?"

"Fine, indeed," replied Clarence, as if suddenly caught with the idea. "The old chap would be more than glad to have us pounce in upon him. I'm in favour of it if it suits Miss Armyn."

"Anything that is pleasant and agreeable to the rest will suit Miss Armyn," said that young lady, indifferently. "But, Kate and Mr. Fordham ?"

"Well, now that we are so independent of them, I must tell you a secret," replied Arteveldt. "The fact is, Fordham declared his intention of taking Miss Seaton for a tete-a-tete drive, and when I came out with my landau he quite snubbed me. I don't really think they will favour us, but of course we can ask them."

"It is evident that they don't covet our society," said Jess, looking back. "They are out of sight this minute. Well, do we go ?"

"Yes, do, do !" said Miss VanBuren.

"Yes, by all means, if you agree, Miss Armyn," added Arteveldt.

"Oh, Lenore ! please say yes," coaxed Jess.

"As I never heard of Miss VanBuren's uncle until the present moment, he can't, of course, be very obnoxious to me," replied Lenore. "I am at your service."

Thus, with apparent carelessness, was ended the first act in this shameful drama.

Ten minutes later the horses were drawn up before a huge brown stone building, which stood almost in the centre of a block of similar commercial-looking edifices, in one of Chicago's busiest thoroughfares. The pavements swarmed with people, and street cars, carriages, hacks, drays, and all manner of vehicles blocked the roadway, and made frequent stoppings and slow progress a matter of necessity.

"We might get out first and run in to announce ourselves, while you wait for a chance of seeing Mr. Fordham," suggested Miss VanBuren to Arteveldt.

"A good idea," laughed the young man, seeming for the time to have forgotten to consult Lenore. "You two ladies, being quite at home, can run along; I will escort Miss Armyn."

In a moment the two, Jess and Carrie VanBuren, were out of the carriage and had disappeared up a broad flight of stone steps just beyond. Clarence Arteveldt made a pretnce of looking vainly for his friend, and then he said :

"We won't wait out here, Miss Armyn; I will take you in, and set the driver to watch for our friends."

Had Lenore looked back, as she sprang from the carriage, she might have seen Mr. Fordham and Kate Seaton coming slowly around the corner, not hlf a block away.

"Hallo, there is Arteveldt and Miss Armyn," exclaimed Fordham, so phomptly that a suspicious listener might have fancied that he had suspected to see them there. "Where are the other ladies ? and where in the—beg pardon, Miss Seaton, where are they going ?"

Where, indeed !

"Drive faster," cried Kate Seaton; "call to them !" Then, as Lenore and her escort disappeared up the stone steps, she sank back with a low cry, "My God ! my God ! where have they gone ?"

Fordham turned toward her a face upon which rested an expression of unutterable astonishment.

"Good Heavens !" he cried, in well-feigned alarm, "they have gone—but no, I am—I must be mistaken."

"You are not mistaken," cried Kate Seaton, wildly; "I saw them. See—" as they came opposite the stone steps—"they went up those steps. They are behind that green door. My God, what shall we do ? Lenore Armyn is in a gambler's den."

More than once while pasing through the streets, in company with her sister and Charlie Ruthven, had the latter pointed to that green, nail-studded door, saying :—

"Look, girls, there is the finest private gambling house in the city; there is the den of the keenest gambler in all Chicago. He is called among sporting men, Gentleman Jeff."

Let us follow Lenore, the victim, and with her make the acquaintance of Gentleman Jeff.

Mr. W. A. F. Campbell, solicitor for the Board, then spoke to the trustees re Stephenson matters. ALL BUT RECIPROCITY.

It Is Now Said at Washington That an All-Round Treaty Will Be Agreed Upon.

Washington, D.C., Dec. 23.—The next session of the joint high commission will be limited pretty closely to a fortnight. Lord Herschell, the British member of the commission, is booked to sail for Europe on Jan. 25. He cannot delay longer in the United States, for the reason that he is obliged to attend the opening of the Paris arbitration on the Venezuelan boundary, being one of the arbitrators. There are indications that, after all, the joint commissioners regard the prospect of reaching an agreement as very much brighter than they did just before the adjournment of the session, and the opinion is now expressed in well-informed circles that, before Lord Herschell's departure, a treaty will have been completed settling all the points in dispute between the two countries, and even making some slight progress towards the attainment of reciprocity.

Blanco Did Leave Something.

Havana, Dec. 23.—Marshal Blanco, though not requested to do so by the American commissioners, issued directions before leaving Cuba that the rich silver palace table service be left for the Americans, and that the magnificent furniture of the reception rooms be also for the American occupants. The official coaches, with the arms of Spain and the furniture of the Treasury Department, will be sold.

The police magistrate of Wiarton has the other justices of the peace after him for interfering with their ground. Mr. Millar claims jurisdiction from Wiarton to Tobermory, and the Bruce Council is taking action in the face of the complaints made to see just what the jurisdiction of Magistrate Millar is.

THE GENEROUS LORD IVEAGH.

The Archbishop of Armagh, Episcopal Primate of Ireland, Questions the Wisdom of the Disarmament Proposal for England—Four More Warships Ordered—A Lucky Elephant—Cable News.

London, Dec. 23.—The Paris correspondent of the Daily Mail says: "The Government has decided to hand the Dreyfus secret dossier to the Court of Cassation. It will also be communicated to Madame Dreyfus and to M. Mornard, the counsel for Dreyfus."

Street Fights in Toulouse.

Toulouse, France, Dec. 23.—Serious street disorders occurred last evening between the promoters of pro-Dreyfus and anti-Dreyfus meetings. Several persons were severely injured, and the windows of a number of Jewish shops were smashed.

Lord Iveagh Is Generous.

London, Dec. 23.—Lord Iveagh (Edward Cecil Guinness) has presented the Jenner Institute with the sum of £250,000 in aid of scientific research in bacteriology and other forms of biology.

Lord Iveagh also proposes to expend £250,000 upon the improvement of the insanitary hull alley area in the heart of Dublin.

The Elephant Was in Luck.

Madrid, Dec. 23.—Much grief is felt here over the death of an elephant which was expected to fight two bulls here on Christmas Day. The fight was to be the sporting event of the year and had been extensively advertised.

A Dangerous Thing.

London, Dec. 23.—Alone among the Episcopal prelates, the Archbishop of Armagh, Primate of Ireland, has seen fit to protest against the disarmament agitation.

Addressing a meeting at Armagh on Thursday, he questioned whether this blowing of trumpets about disarming was wise in the present condition of affairs. They all knew what disarming meant in the case of England. It would mean pulling down the great fleet—a dangerous thing. People should take care.

Died on Their Golden Wedding Day.

Vienna, Dec. 23.—A despatch from Belgrade reports a tragedy of unusual interest. Dr. Johann Asztalos, a physician of national reputation, and his wife, Caroline, committed suicide this week on the night of their golden wedding anniversary. They were found in loving embrace in death.

Four More Warships Ordered.

London, Dec. 23.—The British Admiralty, it is reported, has just placed orders for four warships with shipbuilders on the Clyde.

FREIGHT RATES ON PULP WOOD.

Niagara Falls Paper Mills Will Try to Beat Out Canadian Railroads.

Buffalo, N.Y., Dec. 23.—The Commercial yesterday said: "Within a few days the expected change to be made in freight rates on pulp wood from Canadian points to Niagara Falls and other places by the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific roads will go into effect. The Niagara Falls paper mills interested, however, do not intend that their wood shall cost them any more than now if they can prevent it. With this result in view, they are perfecting plans, it is understood, whereby all this class of freight that comes to Niagara Falls over the lines mentioned will fall to other roads. Enough wood is on hand to do for this winter, and the plan is to have the wood brought across Lake Ontario to Charlotte or some other advantageous lake port, and then shipped by rail, either over the New York Central or the Rome, Watertown & Ogdensburg to the Falls. At present the two paper mills on the canal basin at Niagara Falls pay nearly $60,000 a year in freight rates to the Canadian roads.

Bird Saved a Train.

Austin, Texas, Dec. 23.—The northbound passenger train on the International & Great Northern Railroad escaped a serious wreck 40 miles below here through the intervention of a bird. Some miscreant had tied a rail securely across the track.

A few miles before reaching the spot, a bird, blinded by the headlight, flew against the glass, breaking it and extinguishing the light. This necessitated running slowly to the next station.

The train, proceeding at reduced speed, struck the obstruction, tearing up the track and damaging the front of the engine, but no one was injured.

The Gaspesia in Trouble.

Halifax, Dec. 23.—The steamer Gaspesia, the pioneer vessel of the new Canadian Steamship Company, which has just inaugurated an Atlantic service between Milford Haven and Paspebiac, is ashore on Rice Point, St. Peter's Island, at the entrance to the harbor of Charlottetown, P.E.I. She is on a sand bank. Her captain thought he would be able to get off at high tide on Thursday, as the tide was then three-quarters low.

Boston Money Put Up.

Montreal, Dec. 23.—Arrangements have been made to complete the remaining 83 miles connecting the Great Northern with the Booth system and Parry Sound. It is understood that a Boston syndicate has furnished the necessary money to complete the railway, and that Mr. Macdonald, the contractor, will begin work during the present winter.

The Protests Finished.

Toronto, Dec. 23.—North Grey and the two Ottawa election protests will be disposed of to-day. These are the last. They will be dismissed.

MR. E. G. LAVERDURE HONOURED BY HIS FRIENDS

A COMPLIMENTARY BANQUET EXTENDED TO HIM.

On the Occasion of His Departure From Town for the Winter—A Pleasant Gathering at the Palace—Tributes to the Guest of the Evening.

Last night the pleasant banquet hall of the Palace Restaurant held a very pleasant company composed of the personal and business friends of Mr. E. G. Laverdure, of the firm of Corry & Laverdure, canal contractors, assembled to entertain him at a complimentary supper on the occasion of his departure from town to Ottawa for the winter.

An excellent supper was prepared in the excellent style characteristic of the "Palace." After its discussion with much appreciation, Mr. W. H. Moore, who occupied the chair, Mr. R. S. Davidson, in the vice chair, before introducing an informal toast list, which opened of course with the toast of the Queen, read a letter of regret from Mr. Mayor Davis, regretting his inability to be present, and adding his felicitations to those of the company. Mr. Moore, on behalf the company, then read the following address:

E G Laverdure, Esq.:

On the eve of your departure to your home in Ottawa for this winter season, your friends present to-night have met to wish you bon voyage with a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year.

We heartily assure you that all business and personal relations with you and your firm during the two seasons your firm has been engaged in construction of part of the Trent Valley Canal near Peterborough, have been of the most pleasant and satisfactory nature, and you carry with you our best wishes and leave behind you the kind remembrances and respect of friends present and the citizens of the town generally.

Your having been engaged in the building of an important link in a great public work, in which the town and county has for many years taken the most keen interest, ever considering it of vital concern to this locality and of national consequence, has given you prominence in the public eye; and the high character of the work you have already done, gives confidence to all that a superior class of finish will mark the completion of the section of the canal assigned you by the Government and assure the association of your firm's name with it for many years to come. We look forward to your return in the early spring, and we again most cordially and sincerely wish you the compliments and felicities of the season.

Mr. T. Cahill added a few graceful words to the address, which was received with the chorus, "He's a Jolly Good Fellow." He said Mr. Laverdure would carry to the capital the best wishes of the people of Peterborough. He had carried out his contract on the canal faithfully and well. He was as much respected as a man as he was esteemed for his probity and energy as a contractor. He felt sure that his little tribute would reflect the sentiments of the company.

Mr. Laverdure in rising to reply to the address was very heartily greeted. While thankful for the kind sentiments of the address, it was quite unexpected, since he was a comparative stranger. He was not surprised that he received a similar honour on the occasion of his leaving Ottawa as he was well known there. He was proud to possess the good will of Peterborough as shewn by the occasion of the evening. Referring to his contract on the canal, he said he was proud that his work had met the approval of the chief engineer, and Mr. Rogers, who was present, would say that the completed work was well done. He (Mr. Laverdure) hoped to make it equal to any in the Dominion. He referred in grateful terms to the social courtesies he had received in Peterborough, of which place and its people he would always cherish grateful memories.

Mr. Davidson, vice-chairman, in proposing the toast of the Trent Valley Canal, spoke of the excellent work that had been done on the present contract, which was a most difficult section, including the most important dam on the canal.

Mr. R. B. Rogers, superintending engineer, said that Mr. Laverdure's work had been completed in a most satisfactory manner. He joined in all the good wishes that had been expressed. Regarding the canal he said that there was necessity of pushing on the campaign for extension of work on it, for the present contracts would soon be completed. Activity in this direction was more necessary because of the prominence being given to what would be practically opposing canal schemes. Work on the canal would soon have to cease if more money were not appropriated.

Mr. Harry LeBrun sang the "Marsellaise with the true Gallic fire that characterizes his singing of this strong song. He added a few words to the tribute of respect to Mr. Laverdure already paid. He was proud that the most difficult section of the canal had been given to a French-Canadian compatriot and he would do his work well. Mr. LeBrun had been thirty years in Peterborough and when he came the canal was the talk then, (Laughter)

Mr. G. W. Hatton spoke briefly, mentioning Mr. Laverdure's pleasant social qualities and recognizing the hospitality speaker had received from Mr. Laverdure and his French Canadian friends while on a visit to Ottawa. He had well earned the good feeling the citizens of Peterborough held for him.

The toast of "The Banking and Commercial Interests of Peterborough" received graceful justice from Mr. W. D. Parker, manager of the Ontario Bank. He spoke of the benefits of the good money brought into town regularly through the wages paid by the contractors. He said the commercial interests of the town were thriving, and we could take a cheerful view of the future. Peterborough had struck a good streak. The farmers seemed to have considerable money independent of their grain, which was not being placed much on the market.

Mr. T. Cahill delighted the company with singing in spirited style a song in Galway Gaelic.

In response to his health Mr. G. W. Seguin, treasurer of the contractors, referred to the financial benefits as represented by the payment of $200,000 in wages and supplies.

"The Army, Navy and Volunteers" was associated with "Colonel" Louck's, who briefly responded.

In reply to the heartily drunk toast of his health, the chairman, Mr. Moore, said that Mr. Laverdure, had been an alderman of Ottawa for 20 years and a prominent business citizen, and it was no surprise that he should be esteemed highly in Peterborough. Reference was also made to the benefits of the paying out of such larger sums by the contractor. Mr. Laverdure was worthy of the high esteem of the citizens he enjoyed. The fairness with which the firm's work was done was shown by the small amount of litigation arising from so large a contract.

Mr. Laverdure added a few words, repeating his warm thanks for the hospitality of the evening. He incidentally paid a warm tribute to Hon. Mr. Blair, Minister of Railways and Canals, and bore testimony to his fitness to successfully administrate the department of Railways and Canals.

The People's Faith

Firmly Grounded Upon Real Merit —They Knew Hood's Sarsaparilla Absolutely and Permanently Cures When All Others Fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is not merely a simple preparation of Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia and a little Iodide of Potassium.

Besides these excellent alteratives, it also contains those great anti-bilious and liver remedies, Mandrake and Dandelion. It also contains those great kidney remedies, Uva Ursi, Juniper Berries, and Pipsissewa.

Nor are these all. Other very valuable curative agents are harmoniously combined in Hood's Sarsaparilla and it is carefully prepared under the personal supervision of a regularly educated pharmacist.

Knowing these facts, is the abiding faith the people have in Hood's Sarsaparilla a matter of surprise? You can see why Hood's Sarsaparilla cures, when other medicines totally, absolutely fail.

ST. JOHN'S CLAIMS AS A WINTER PORT.

The EXAMINER has received a copy of a finely printed and elaborately illustrated pamphlet issued by the civic corporation and Board of Trade of St. John, New Brunswick, descriptive of the port of St. John and the Bay of Fundy, and assertive of its claims to be considered the most desirable winter port of Canada. The chief object of this pamphlet seems to be to make more widely known the advantages possessed by St. John as a port for the import and export business of the Dominion, especially during the winter months. The book also serves a patriotic purpose as well by howing the people of Canada that they can receive and forward their goods through Canadian ports as expeditiously, as cheaply and as safely as through United States ports. The book is beautifully printed and gotten up, and illustrated by plans, maps and photographs, showing railway connections and the amplitude and safety of the beautiful harbour of St. John. The little book also contains a great deal of valuable information relating to the growth of Canadian trade with the Mother Country, and information regarding routes and distances of the greatest interest to shippers and travellers. In a word the little book justifies the conclusion which its compiler reaches in the following closing paragraphs:

> The statement was made in the opening paragraph of this book that Saint John, as Canada's chief winter port, should have the first place in the consideration of British and Canadian shippers and importers.
> The claim is based on a plain statement of facts that appeal to the judgment of the business man, who is not much given to indulgence in sentimental ventures.
> And yet, if the last two years in Imperial history have been especially marked by anything, it has been by appeals to sentiment, with resultant changes. It will not, therefore, be out of place if, after having in these pages set forth the business reasons which should influence shippers and importers to recognize the claims of Saint John we direct attention to the sentimental aspect of the subject.
> The first appeal is obviously to Canadians. There should be no east and no west so far as Canadian sentiment is concerned. If lack of facilities or lack of knowledge in former years prevented Canadian merchants from patronizing a home port such a plea is no longer valid.
> Saint John offers equally low rates, equally or more prompt delivery, perfect safety in transit, and all the advantages any foreign port can offer, with some distinctly its own. He will manifest the true Canadian spirit who takes account of these facts, and aids in the building up of Canada by giving his trade to the All-Canadian Route.
> The same sentiment, in perhaps a wider sense, should actuate the British merchant. Given at least equal business inducements, he may fairly be asked to throw the weight of his influence and example in the scale in favour of the development of Imperial Trade by an Imperial Route.
> The citizens of Saint John are not soliciting special favours or asking recognition that would involve a sacrifice of business interests or a loss of trade. On hard business principles first, and then on the plea of an enlightened patriotism, they base their argument and their claim on behalf of Saint John as the chief winter port of Canada!

THE Bobcaygeon Independent thinks it is time that Sifton was left alone. "Discuss his policy as much as you please, but don't discuss the man. The thing has become sickening by repetition. Our Tory contemporaries will please turn on another tap The Sifton tap is turning the public stomach."

THE Mail and Empire has had Manitoba's foot on Mr. Sifton's neck, crushing the political life out of him. That's the romantic side of the situation. The facts are that Mr. Sifton has been twice banquetted and signally honoured in Manitoba—at Brandon and Boissevain. The organ doesn't fancy the plan of killing the Minister of the Interior with kindness—it wants blood.

THE congregation of St. Andrew's church, Toronto, have extended a call to Dr. Connal, of Formosa, and also to an English minister. Both have declined. Why should the congregation go outside of Canada for ministers capable of filling their pulpit? St. Andrew's has had Canadian ministers who were as capable as any that can be got abroad. Besides Canadian trained ministers know the ways of the people and are capable of exercising a better pastorate than outsiders, who have to have considerable training to adapt them to their new conditions. Canada for Canadians should be the motto in both church and state. We don't need missionaries. Native born and trained ministers are good enough for the best pastorate in Canada.

GOOD ROADS CRUSADE ENTERED UPON IN SMITH.

MR. A. W. CAMPBELL FIRES THE FIRST GUN.

Large and Enthusiastic Meetings at Bridgenorth and Lakefield—Statute Labour as at Present Practised Condemned.

A large and enthusiastic meeting at Bridgenorth, called by Mr. Reeve Armstrong in the interests of good roads, was held in the town hall, Bridgenorth, Wednesday night, to listen to an address on "Roads and Road Making," by Mr. A. W. Campbell, C. E, Provincial Instructor on Road Making.

The chair was occupied by Mr. J. G. Armstrong, reeve of the township, who was instrumental in securing the presence of Mr. Campbell and the tone of the meeting—the practical appreciation of the address and the interest manifested in the general nature of the subject amply justified his course in arranging for the meeting.

After a general introduction Mr. Campbell took up the subject of statute labour, which as commonly carried on, was severely condemned. It was clearly shown to be both extravagant in the matter of expense and unsatisfactory in results. In it was pointed out that in the township of Smith there were put in annually about 3,000 days of statute labour in addition to a cash expenditure of $2,000. This in the past ten years would amount to $50,000 or its equivalent, and the present state of the highways do not show that value had been received for such a large expenditure of labour and money. It was further pointed out that the statute labour system had served a good purpose in the early history of the country, when such labour could be employed to proper advantage, when the aim was not so much to make good roads as roads that could be considered passably useable, but the usefulness of the system had ended because circumstances demanded better roads—roads that were permanent in character—that are being graded, drained and properly laid out. Nowadays gravel was being used, but often of so inferior a quality and so carelessly applied, as to not make a good or substantial roadway.

To make good roads, proper machinery was needed, such as a road grader, rock crusher and roller. In order to get good results, experienced persons should be put in charge of, especially, the road grader, and the roads should be classified according to their situation and importance, decided upon and carried out in a definite, not haphazard, way. The more travelled roads should, of course, receive the first attention, and the work should be extended to by-roads according to the amount of travel upon them. Each year's work should be done in a substantial and finished manner, and extended from year to year. The speaker pointed out that if such a system had been begun, and carried out, ten years ago one-half of the road mileage in the township of Smith would have been in good condition without any further expenditure, except occasional repairs here and there. If the statute labour had been commuted and added to the money expenditure under a proper system, instead of the present roads the township would have now 75 out of its 150 miles of its roads permanently macadamized, and made good, with occasional repairs, for all time to come, and ten more years of similar expenditure would give the township good roads throughout all its borders.

The speaker urged the necessity of proper drainage and proper crowning to the road bed, as well as the importance of using proper broken stone. The use of dirty gravel was unsparingly condemned, as being a worthless and extravagant and

WASTE OF MONEY AND WORK.

The speaker urged the importance of classifying roads and outlined the proper kind of specification that should be adopted, and a manner of subdividing the township for the government of future expenditure was suggested. The number of formen to be selected and the kind of commissioners to be appointed were also fully discussed.

At the conclusion of the able and practical address of Mr. Campbell, a most spirited discussion took place. Almost every man of the representative audience present took part in the discussion, and the earnest interest that had been aroused by the address was shown by the fact that Mr. Campbell was made the target of numerous pertinent questions as to the details suggested by his remarks, all of which were answered to the satisfaction of the interrogators. So deeply was the company interested that it was a quarter past eleven o'clock before the meeting broke up

At the conclusion of the discussion a resolution was unanimously passed recommending the township council to abolish the statute labour system, and substitute a plan similar to that suggested by Mr. Campbell.

At Lakefield.

Mr. Campbell addressed another large meeting at Lakefield on Thursday night upon the same general subject, and the same eager interest was taken in the large amount of practical information given. Mr. Campbell's visit to Smith will doubtless be of the very greatest practical benefit.

A POPULAR MISTAKE.

Regarding Remedies for Dyspepsia and Indigestion.

The national disease of Americans is indigestion or, in its chronic form, dyspepsia, and for the very reason that it is so common, many people neglect taking proper treatment for what they consider trifling stomach trouble, when, as a matter of fact, indigestion lays the foundation for many incurable diseases. No person with a vigourous, healthy stomach will fall a victim to consumption. Many kidney disease and heart troubles date their beginning from poor digestion; thin, nervous people are really so because their stomachs are out of gear; weary, languid, faded out women owe their condition to imperfect digestion.

When nearly every person you meet is afflicted with weak digestion is is not surprising that nearly every secret patent medicine on the market claims to be a cure for dyspepsia, as well as a score of other troubles, when in fact, as Dr. Werther says, there is but one genuine dyspepsia cure which is perfectly safe and reliable, and moreover this remedy is not a patent medicine, but it is a scientific combination of pure pepsin (free from animal matter), vegetable essences, fruit salts and bismuth. It is sold by druggists under name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. No extravagant claims are made for them, as for indigestion or any stomach trouble, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are far ahead of any remedy yet discovered. They act on the food eaten, no dieting is necessary, simply eat all the wholesome food you want and these pills will digest it. A cure results, because all the stomach needs is a rest, which Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets give by doing the work of digestion.

Druggists sell these tablets at 50c per package. Circulars and testimonial sent free by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

King Christmas

the "Ever Young" is Returning for His Homage.

The Yule log is being hauled; the mistletoe has appeared, and our store has become the headquarters of all those thoughtful Gift Givers who carry common sense with ideas of comfort and luxury into their Xmas giving.

FURS Handsome and Comfortable Garments for street wear during the chilly and cold days of winter, we have made up here in unusual variety. There is a look of luxury and a sense of comfort to the modest priced Fur Ruff, Caperine, Muff or Jacket; or, in fact any Fur Garment, added to its warmth and serviceableness, which makes it an ideal Xmas Gift.

FOR HER—The Xmas Gift should be something handsome, cosy, rich and warm that she'll use and enjoy. A pair of Fur Gauntlets $2, $3, $4, $5, up to $12; a Rich Ruff, $1, $2, $3, $4, $5, up to $15, extra select at $8; a Cosy Caperine $5, $7, $10, $12, up to $35; a Warm Muff $1, $2, $4, $5, up to $15; a few choice Sable ones at $6 and $8, extra at $10, and a hundred and one other articles, such as Jackets, Capes, Fur-lined Cloak, Collarette, Caps, Etc.

FOR HIM—Things of personal use and convenience—comfort-giving and serviceable—when he walks or drives he likes a warm pair of Fur Gauntlets $2.50 to $12, Imitation Fur $1 to $1.50. Perhaps a Fur Coat would be best, cheap ones at $10, $12, $15, $18 and $25. Finer qualities in Coon and Buffalo, $25, $30, $35, $40. If he has a "a driver," a pair of Fine Goat, Buffalo, Bear or Musk Ox Robes would be sure to please. We have them from $5 up to $50. Then there is a Fur Cap or a Fur Collar for his coat. Buck, Mocha or Kid Gloves and Mitts, lined with fur or with fleecy wool 50c. to 35c. Something extra would be a Fur-lined Coat, with Fur Collar and Cuffs and a fine Beaver, Melton or Pilot Cloth outside. We have have them at $50, $60 and $75.

FOR TINY TOTS—Xmas is everything—they expect great things and they all like Furs—why not give a Fur Collar, or Ruff, or Cap or Gauntlets of Pearly Grey Lamb or White Iceland Lamb. Prices start as low as $1.50 and reach $5.50 for any of the above mentioned. You'll give them extreme pleasure and save money on a doctor's bill for cold, coughs, etc. They are the cheapest wrap, in the long run, you can possibly buy for a child—as they wear well and look well for years and can be cleaned when they grow soiled. Little Ones—Ask Santa Claus to bring you Fairweather's Furs.

In buying Furs here you buy safely—we make them on the premises or at our Toronto store—(J. & J. Lugsdin's). The sewing is well done—the skins are very carefully selected—the tanning and dyeing is the best—in fact we assume all risks as we guarantee our Furs to be just as represented—and Prices are "factory prices"—no mideleman's profits to pay. Buy always where you can buy good goods cheapest.

We wish one and all a very Merry Xmas.

A Narrow Escape.

Thankful words written by Mrs. Ada E Hart, of Groton, S.D.: "Was taken with a bad cold which settled on my lungs; cough set in and finally terminated in consumption. Four doctors gave me up, saying I could live but a short time. I gave myself up to my Saviour, determined, if I could not stay with my friends on earth, I would meet my absent ones above. My husband was advised to give Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. I gave it a trial, took in all eight bottles. It has cured me, and thank God, I am saved and now a well and healthy woman." Sold by all druggists, 50 cts. and $1.00. Guaranteed or price refunded.

ST. JOHN WILL APPEAL

The Judges Disagreed on Charge 111 in West York Trial.

WIDELY DIVERGENT VIEWS.

Both Judges State Their Conclusions at Length — Another Constable Charge Thrown Out—Strange Story of Two Men With a Satchel of the Needful—Other Charges Tried.

Toronto, Dec. 23.—It was 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon when the judgment in charge 111 of the West York election trial was reached. Upon this charge the friends of J. W. St. John had built their hopes. The presentation of the evidence had lasted two days, and the arguments about five hours. The lawyers concluded their addresses at noon yesterday, and their lordships suspended judgment for the moment, but gave their decision of disagreement later in the day.

In making known the decision, Justice Falconbridge said he and his learned brother took widely different views of the evidence, resulting in a disagreement, which apparently could not be removed, but it would be left to the Court of Appeal if it went that far.

Mr. Justice Street said he made known his decision with a great deal of hesitation, but he must give his decision in favor of the respondent in the case. The principle evidence was by Walter Wright. "It is impossible to separate what is true from what is false in his evidence, and there is a great deal of difficulty in unravelling it. The charge depends on the evidence of Mr. Brown, Mrs. Brown, Walter Wright and Mrs. Parsons. I accept Parsons' statement as being true.

Brown's and Wright's stories agreed in but one point, that something was said about a constableship. Brown himself swears the promise of appointment was absolute. Wright has been contradicted by nearly every witness that has been called.

The Browns are a weak out, and the fact that they all agree upon a wrong date means that there has been an agreement among them. The fact that he would accept a plug of tobacco for his vote shows a low order of morality and intelligence, at least, though I am not questioning Brown's honesty. I cannot undertake to say that any specific charge of corruption has been proved.

There was only one book issued for Scarlet Plains division. The evidence shows that Wright had not the book before it was returned to the committee rooms. I can't hold Wright to be an agent, to within three days of the election. I could not depend entirely on Pearen's evidence.

Mr. Justice Falconbridge read the charge. "With great reluctance and diffidence," he said, "I differ with my learned brother.

"The points to be decided on are: 1. Whether corrupt or illegal practice has been proved. 2. Whether Wright was an agent. In reference to the first I think it has been fully proved. There is abundant evidence to show that Wright had made the corrupt offer independent of Parsons. I am satisfied that these people are substantially telling the truth, the offer was made and that it was acted upon. Though I appreciate the force of the argument affecting the difference in time, nevertheless I have been forced to come to the conclusion that the story is in the main true. Brown undoubtedly went to the poll, although he found the corrupt promise wasn't carried out.

"Upon the whole, with great diffidence and hesitation, I have been forced to come to the conclusion that there was a corrupt offer.

"In regard to agency, in the former case his mere confession would not constitute Wright an agent, but I have not yet heard any reasonable explanation of his having possession of those books. I think Wright has been telling the truth. I think Mrs. Wright was telling the truth. He got the books on the evening of the election or after. The intrinsic evidence of these books is enough to satisfy me that there was an agency. I think Wright was handed the books in the hurry of election times. With reference to his occupation during the election, he swears he canvassed 20 or 30 people and only one man is produced who stated he didn't canvass him. He was seen working at the polls as an outside scrutineer.

"Pearen's evidence was extremely unsatisfactory, though I don't say dishonestly so.

"Bogg's evidence about the books was extremely unsatisfactory, though not dishonestly so.

"I think the charge is proved, therefore, there will be no judgment here. Either party may bring the case to the Court of Appeal."

At the conclusion of the judgment Mr. Bristol asked Mr. Justice Street if, as stated in his finding, he considered Wright an agent within three days of the election; if so, this proved the Hedmond case.

"I should not like to be understood as deciding that Wright was an agent three or four days before the election," was Justice Street's answer.

The charge that Thomas Watson, the druggist from Weston, had offered Mr. Harvey the position of poll constable if he would vote for Mr. Hill, was dismissed, their lordships saying there had been a misapprehension.

The court then heard charges 55 to 58, in which Mr. Lenahan was charged with offering $5 for a vote in his hotel at Claireville. William Wetherall testified that he had been offered $5 by Lenahan the night before the election. Cross-examined, the witness put a value on his vote. He was a Conservative.

Arthur McArthur was also a Conservative. In the barroom of Lenahan's hotel, Claireville, he was talking to Lenahan, who said he would give witness $5 for his vote. Lenahan threw down $5 and witness said he would take it. Lenahan then proposed witness should sign a declaration, and witness said: "Oh, pshaw," and went away.

Arthur Hayes was the 17-year-old son of his father, Jimmy Hayes, who unblushingly asserted that he had taken eight drinks and two cigars in Lenahan's hotel on this night. He appeased the court, however, with the statement that his drinks were sarsaparilla. He had overheard Lenahan offer Wetherall and McArthur $5 apiece. He heard Lenahan say that on Sunday two men came to dinner and told him to get the pay out of the satchel, and Lenahan did so, taking as much as he could hold in his hand.

"Can you produce those men?" said Justice Falconbridge.

"I only wish we could," said Mr. Bristol.

William Beamish of Etobicoke had stated to Lenahan that he would take $5 for his vote. Lenahan asked him how he would like to get $95. Witness replied he would rather have the $5.

"That is the difference between the cash and credit value of a vote," said Justice Street.

Lenahan told witness to come around on Sunday and he would give him the money.

Court adjourned.

St. John to Appeal.

Mr. St. John was asked if he would appeal the case. He looked bored, and asked for time to breathe, although he did not go so far as say that the decision had taken his breath away. Mr. Bristol, however, told a reporter the appeal would be entered.

WARDEN FOSTER'S SUSPENSION.

Allegations of Strong Partisanship, Bartering With Subordinates, Etc.

Moncton, N.B., Dec. 23.—Only two witnesses have so far been examined at the investigation of affairs at Dorchester Penitentiary, where Warden Foster has just been suspended by the Department of Justice. These witnesses were Dr. Mitchell, penitentiary surgeon, and Vital Legare, who was a guard until some time last year. The allegations against the warden included strong partisanship; arranging for the purchase of a piece of marsh land by the Government by which he benefited personally; barter and exchange between the warden and certain prison officials in buying potatoes, coal, hay and other products, which bartering was contrary to regulations; trading Government horses with guards and others to his personal advantage; working guards and convicts on his private property without giving due credit to the Government for labor so performed; having a negro convict named Martin travelling around Memramcook and other places with the warden's stallion for service, a direct violation of regulations. Martin was a colored porter who stole a large sum of money on a Pullman car some years ago.

ON THE BRINK.

The Grand Trunk Telegraphers Send the Company an Ultimatum Chief Powell Was Reticent.

Montreal, Dec. 23.—A crisis in the negotiations between the telegraphers in the employ of the Grand Trunk Railway and the railway company has, it is understood, been reached. The telegraphers' committee, accompanied by Grand Chief Powell of the Order of Railway Telegraphers, met General Manager Hays at 10 o'clock yesterday morning. The conference lasted until nearly 1 o'clock, when the committee withdrew.

Soon after the conference, Grand Chief Powell was very reticent as to what had taken place. It was inferred, however, that a crisis in the negotiations had been reached. The committee did not continue its conference with Mr. Hays in the afternoon, and it is understood that to-day by noon will decide whether the negotiations looking to a settlement of the grievances of the telegraphers will be broken off for good. The committee has been in session in its committee rooms at the Balmoral during the greater part of the afternoon. They will authorize no definite statement, but there is every reason to believe that a crisis has been reached.

Is It an Ultimatum?

The telegraphers' committee sent Mr. Hays a communication last evening, and from all that can be learned, it has taken the form of an ultimatum. In fact Mr. Powell said that the future action of the men would be guided by the general manager's reply, which will probably be known early in the day.

Terrible Scene in a Factory.

New York, Dec. 23.—A shocking affair occurred in the Castle Braid Company's works at Williamsburg yesterday, when John Guertherman was torn to pieces in machinery. His clothing caught in the shaft while he was oiling the machines. His left leg was ripped from his body and fell to the floor. Then a scene of indescribable confusion ensued. There are 200 women employes, and some screamed and ran panic-stricken from the place, while others fainted. In the meantime Guertherman's other leg was severed from the body and also his right arm. When the machinery was stopped what was left of his body was found tightly wedged in it. Surgeon Glennen, who was called, devoted his time to restoring to consciousness the dozen women who were lying in a faint on the floor.

ASHBURNHAM'S KINDERGARTEN CLOSING.

A Very Successful Event—It was Held Yesterday Afternoon.

The first closing exercises in connection with the Ashburnham Kindergarten, held on Thursday afternoon, were highly successful in every sense of the word, and reflected great credit on the director, Miss Agnes Williamson and her assistants, Misses E. Purser, D. Comstock and H. Burnham, as well as on the pupils themselves.

The chair was ably filled by Mr. E. A. Peck, chairman of the school board, and Mr. R. B. Rogers kindly officiated as Santa Claus.

The Kindergarten was organized only last September, and in the short space of time which has since elapsed good progress has been made. The singing, marching, games, recitations, etc., by the children were executed in a very creditable manner.

Part of the time the pupils were seated at the tables at their usual work and proved centres of attraction to the many visitors present. It is quite safe to say that all present felt more than ever the value of Kindergarten training.

It is quite impossible to give the programme in full, as it was so interesting and varied. Some of those giving recitations were Ernest Delaire, Dolly James, Isabel Symonds, Cecil White, Reta Gaskins, Alex. McAllister, Mabel Russell, Jessie Spence, Frances Stone, Lizzie Manlece, Wanda Weir, Boyd Symonds, Helen Burgess, Merton Adams and Fanny Long.

A very interesting feature was the distribution of the presents on the gaily decorated tree. Each pupil received a present and the Kindergarten teachers were not forgotten either. The choice of Santa Claus was a very happy one. He performed his duties to the entire satisfaction of all the pupils and promised to call again on them on Christmas.

All concerned are to be congratulated on the success which attended the closing exercises.

The Kindergarten will re-open on Tuesday, Jan. 3rd, when it is hoped that all pupils will be present.

Don't Use an Axe.
A warning is extended to ratepayers not to use axes in removing ice from the granolithic pavements. The police are instructed to watch any incursions into this rule. CHRISTMAS SHOP WINDOWS.

Splendid Stocking Fillers in Gorgeous Display.

Never before since Peterborough had a local habitation and a name has there been so magnificent and tasteful range of Christmas shop windows as blaze along both sides of George street and other streets. The contents of these windows indicate the wealth of beautiful goods behind them. The taste displayed in the arrangements of the beautiful goods is in some cases perfect, and there is a delightful uniform excellence that marks all the displays. Some are exceedingly beautiful, both in design and execution, but so excellent are all that to make distinction by specific mention would be to land one in as much trouble as awarding prizes at a baby show. As every crow thinks her own the blackest, so every window dresser naturally thinks his window a chef d'œuvre.

It is a positive pleasure to dawdle along the street and study the tempting displays in the shop windows. Everything conceivable that art or skill can produce or money can buy, seems to look one in the face. Beauty characterizes everything and is by no means confined to the purely ornamental. The useful in these days of advance are deeply tinged with the beautiful.

The shop windows show, in their splendid displays that good times are in the land—that merchants believe that the people have money to make all these beautiful things disappear in the depths of the Christmas stocking. Our merchants have surpassed themselves this Christmas in their window displays.

THE BEST CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

A Yearly Ticket to the Public Library.

Parents who wish to make a Christmas present of real value can make no mistake in giving it the form of a yearly ticket to the Public Library. Such a present will be a perpetual source of pleasure and delight, besides helping to fix the reading habit, where it is not already formed. An immense, and a carefully selected library will be made accessable to the fortunate holder of a ticket, besides the privileges of the reading room, etc. Such a ticket will cost no more than an ordinary gift book, while it practically represents the gift of over 7000 volumes of first class books on every possible subject. Give your boy a ticket, or give some of your friends, who are fond of reading and have not the means of access to books, a ticket, and you will have the consciousness of having given a present which will give perpetual pleasure the year round.

Christmas comes but once a year, but the bargains to make merry with are always here. Grafton & Co., Clothing Manufacturers.

HOME READING BIBLE STUDY COURSE.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

DEAR SIR,—You have already announced in your columns that Rev. Herbert Symonds, of St. Luke's, Ashburnham, has kindly consented to give a course of Bible studies under the auspices of the local branch of the National Home Reading Union. I wish to impress upon all who have access to this rare privilege, the importance of taking advantage of the opportunity offered. Rev. Mr. Symonds has delivered a similar course at Trinity College, and by experience in exegetical treatment of Holy Scripture, is eminently well qualified for investing such a course with the deepest interest, and making it a valuable source of information on the highest of all subjects. His broad scholarship, his extensive literary culture will give an additional charm to the important lessons he is otherwise so well qualified to impress. It is often a wonder to me how the reverend gentleman finds so much time to busy himself with the pursuit of so many worthy objects. But he does it, and does it well, and I have no doubt that his Bible studies will be of a piece with all his work. The studies will be given in the Y.M.C.A. hall every Saturday afternoon, beginning with the first Saturday of the new year. I would again urge all who are in a position to take advantage of attendence upon the course to make arrangements to do so. I am sure the time will be most profitably spent.

Yours very truly,
A MEMBER.

APPALLING DEATH

From Kidney Disease Prevented by Dodd's Kidney Pills, Only.

"Kidney Disease." Do you know what it means? It means that the kidneys are either rotten, or rotting; the blood is full of poisonous, death-dealing corruption; that the Kidneys can't do their work; that the victim is a walking charnel-house; that his hours are numbered; that the victim MUST take Dodd's Kidney Pills if he does not want to die.

Have you Kidney Disease? Is your skin hot and dry; memory failing; breath short; urine, reddish, or pale colored; does it scald when passing; is your appetite changeable; do your ankles swell; have you bitter taste in the mouth on getting up mornings; is there a brick-dust deposit in your urine?

Any of these signs is proof positive of Kidney Disease. Will you be cured, or will you die? Dodd's Kidney Pills are the only means on earth that will cure you. They never fail.

SLOWLY BURNED TO DEATH.

The Awful Fate of Roderick Chisholm, a Chicago Electrician.

Chicago, Dec. 23.—Among a network of wires 90 feet above the ground, Roderick Chisholm, an electrician, was slowly burned to death last night, in sight of several hundred spectators. For nearly ten minutes the horror-stricken crowd watched the workmen in their frantic efforts to release their comrade from among the wires. He had grasped a live wire. Ladders were secured, and after considerable difficulty and not a little danger to the rescuers, Chisholm's body was gotten to the street.

$1,000 Stolen.

Brandon, Man., Dec. 23.—A thief entered the store of Clifton, Walkins & Co. of Forrest and robbed the safe, taking therefrom $1,000, which had been received from Parrish, Lindsay & Co. in the usual course of business to pay for grain purchased from the farmers.

Changing Cables in Secret.

St. John's, Nfld., Dec. 23.—The French cable steamer Contre, Admiral Courbet, which has been engaged during the last two weeks in altering the positions of the French cables across the Grand Banks, appeared off this harbor Tuesday evening. She did not enter, and when dawn came yesterday it was found she had disappeared. The impression is general among marine people that she is engaged in cable work of a secret character, which is carried on after dark.

Censured Governor Murray.

A MILLION MILLION.

How Long, Think You, Would It Take You to Count It?

Professor Wagstaff, whose very name suggests a pleasing first cousinship to Shakespeare, has lately been amusing himself and his audience at Gresham college by speculations as to what might have happened if the father of our human race had given up delving and taken to figures. Let us suppose that Adam had set himself to count a million million, or, in figures, 1,000,000,000,000. We will imagine that he could count three in a second, which, though not exactly rapid cyphering, will be found ample, if taken continuously. Now, if 6,000 years have elapsed since the gracious amenities of Eden formed the cradle of humanity, Adam would have been working for 189,216,000,000 seconds and have reached a total of 567,648,000,000 figures. In other words, his task of counting a million million would still have been unaccomplished by over four hundred thousand millions digits.

All of which goes to prove what? There are many possible conclusions. The first is, of course, that Professor Wagstaff is a very ingenious and by no means melancholy mathematician, but that hardly needed proof. A second deduction, which we advance with all humility, is that if Adam had only had habitual recourse to harmless dissipation of this arithmetical kind, instead of betraying marital weakness and a fondness for fruit, his descendants would have been very much better off morally and spiritually, though not perhaps in material comforts. And a third conclusion, eminently gratifying to those who refuse to believe that there is any serious discord between religion and science, is that Professor Wagstaff, no doubt a man of distinction in scientific attainments, accepts without any demur Bishop Usher's chronology.

According to the divine, the world was created in 4004 B. C., and that added to the 1898 years which have elapsed since the Christian era makes in round numbers the 6,000 years on which the whole calculation depends. Some wayward "scientists" have dogmatically affirmed that the world has been wagging along a good many more centuries than Ussher supposed, although there is a serious difference, it is true, in this matter between the astronomers and the geologists. So, after all, perhaps if Adam had been reasonably industrious, he would have had time to accomplish his task, unless his brain had given way under the strain. Most of us have such vague ideas as to the meaning of large figures that it is as well to be reminded by so happy an illustration how many units go to the making of a million. The only other conceivable fashion in which such instruction could be acquired is to become a South African "boss" of mines and diamonds, and that process, much as we may desire it, is, fortunately or unfortunately, not open to the majority of us.—London Telegraph.

AN ENDLESS CHAIN.

Of Kidney Diseases Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Ingersoll, Dec. 12—The newspapers throughout the Dominion published, last week, reports of the almost miraculous recovery of Mr. Michael Sherlock, after a prolonged illness with Kidney, Bladder and Urinary troubles. Mr. Sherlock's recovery was due solely to his use of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

This week another case is reported. Mr. G. J. Cook, a farmer living in West Oxford township, states that Dodd's Kidney Pills cured him of Kidney Disease and Lame Back, after he had suffered for over a year.

Thus it goes. The report of each cure by Dodd's Kidney Pills, brings another to light. Dodd's Kidney Pills have formed an immense endless chain of cures all round the Dominion. They have not failed once.

The Cheetul.

The axis, or cheetul, deer of the Indian jungle can claim to be the most ornamental of all the 36 races of deer to be seen gathered together at Woburn. In the early summer, when all the other deer except the wapiti are either shedding their horns or "in the velvet," the axis are in perfection, both of color and antlers. The large herd of this species looks as if carved out of ivory and red gold in the sunshine and verdure of English scenery. Their horns are almost white, their eyes and muzzles of jet black, their throats white and their backs and sides a brilliant golden tan, spotted with round dots of purest white. It is worth a pilgrimage to Woburn to see these deer alone. They breed constantly, sometimes producing two fawns in the twelvemonth.—Spectator.

Welcoming Fresh Cares.

"As far as fresh cares are concerned," said a man of mature years, "as I grow older I rather welcome them. They blot out the old cares completely and so show how unsubstantial they were, and I know that in due course them new cares will be supplanted by others and will as completely give way to them. Thus I am constantly reminded that our cares really don't amount to much, except as we imagine them great, and I expect to see the day when I shall give but scanty room to them and not be disturbed by them at all."—New York Sun.

WRITES A LETTER ON DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT.

Sufferers are at liberty to correspond with the above address and will obtain full particulars regarding the great cure.

He says: My wife was most terribly afflicted with protruding piles, and contemplated a surgical operation. A friend of ours recommended, the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and less than one box effected a complete cure. We were so pleased with the ointment that I tried it myself, as I have been troubled with an unsightly skin affliction which covered the lower part of my face.

For 25 years I suffered untold agony, and was treated by the best medical skill in the United States. I consider Dr. Chase's Ointment worth its weight in gold for piles and skin disease.

QUITE INFORMAL.

Lincoln's Reception of the Notification Committee.

In the "Biography of Charles Carleton Coffin" is his own account of accompanying the committee to the home of Mr. Lincoln in Springfield, Ills., to notify him of his nomination for president. They reached Springfield early in the evening, and after supper at the hotel made their call on Lincoln. It was not to be a very formal interview.

Lincoln stood in the parlor, dressed in a black frock coat. The announcement was made, and his reply seemed brief. He was evidently much constrained, but as soon as the last word had been spoken he turned to Mr. Kelley of Pennsylvania, the chairman of the committee, and said: "Judge, you are a pretty tall man. How tall are you?"

"Six feet two."

"I beat you! I am 6 feet 3 without my high heeled boots."

"Pennsylvania bows to Illinois, where, we have been told, there were only little giants," said Kelley.

This was an allusion to Douglas, who had been called the "Little Giant."

One by one the members of the committee were introduced to Lincoln, and when the handshaking was over he said:

"Gentlemen, Mrs. Lincoln will be pleased to see you in the adjoining room, where you will find some refreshments."

There Mrs. Lincoln met them pleasantly, but the only visible sign of refreshments was a white earthen pitcher filled with ice water. This was possibly Mr. Lincoln's little joke, for it was afterward ascertained that his Republican neighbors had offered to furnish wines and liquors, which he refused to have in his house, and that his Democratic friends had sent round baskets of champagne, which were also declined.

A Nautical Explanation.

In front of the Theater Royal at Oxford, England, are, or were, some gigantic stone figures, the age and object of which are buried in oblivion. Two sailors were going by and one of them asked, "Who are these fellows, Bill?"

"The 12 apostles," was the reply without a smile.

"Twelve apostles!" roared the incredulous Jack. "How can that be? There's only six of 'em."

"Well, y' swab," replied the learned Bill, "yer wouldn't have 'em all on deck at once, would ye?"—Leeds Mercury.

TOO SURE OF HER MAN.

He Came to Tell Her Important News, but She Beat Him Off.

"There's no use of your saying a word!" exclaimed the woman of the house as soon as she had opened the door and glanced at the man standing outside. "I know you."

"But, ma'am"—

"I recognized you as soon as I saw you. You can't"—

"Ma'am"—

"You're the man who sold me a washing machine six months ago for $6.50 that wasn't worth shucks. It wouldn't"—

"All I wanted to tell you, ma'am, is"—

"It wouldn't wash anything. The longer you used it the dirtier the clothes got. You couldn't sell me anything now if you was to pay me for taking it. When a man fools me once, he won't ever have the chance to do it again. I can tell you that. I'll sell that washing machine back to you for 50 cents. It doesn't make any difference what you've got this time. I wouldn't touch it with a ten foot pole, and you can talk until you are gray. It won't do any good."

"Madam," yelled the man, who had been dancing about impatiently, "your kitchen roof is blazing where that iron stovepipe runs up through it! That's what I stopped to"—

"Good land! Why didn't you say so? What did you want to stand there talking for when the house is burning up? Run over to that grocery store on the corner and turn in an alarm! Fire! Fire!"

Blind Reading.

By a system of numeral type invented by Rev. W. H. Murray of Peking, originally a Scotch workman, the blind people of China are now taught to read and write in less than three months, and this in spite of the fact that there are 408 distinct sounds in the Chinese language. By a special adaptation of this system the blind are now actually teaching sighted pupils to read.

A NEW INVENTION

The Newcombe Piano Has It.

It consists of a Patented Practice CLAVIER or STOP which diminishes the tone when required and saves wear on the Piano; it also does away with the old way of having to press down the pedal with the foot in order to soften the tone when running the scales or practicing. Oftentimes the young pupil on the piano cannot press down on the pedal without throwing themselves out of the proper position when they should sit erect. This invention in the NEWCOMBE PIANO will enable children to begin two years earlier on the piano. In addition to the above, the NEWCOMBE PIANO is the finest made in Canada. Children often complain about practicing; they like it if they have a NEWCOMBE PIANO. 1898 styles are gems of art, containing every late improvement; they possess that beautiful full sweet tone which delights the singer, and so pleases every musical ear. Organs of every description at Wholesale Prices.

Big Bargains now on hand in slightly used. Upright and Square Pianos of the various makes taken in part exchange for the famous NEWCOMBE PIANOS. Every NEWCOMBE PIANO has a new registered scale and the warranty is cast in the plate. "IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY."

To Wm. McCabe, Esq., Managing Director, North American Life Assurance Co., Toronto:

DEAR SIR,—Your official notice came duly to hand, apprising me of the results obtainable upon my 15 year endowment Policy in your Company for $1,000, which matured on the 8th inst. Of the various options you have given me viz.:

Cash value	$1,564 96
Paid-up Policy, payable at my death, for	2,560 00
Yearly Income for life of	166 20

I have decided upon the cash value; and it gives me pleasure to testify that, as I anticipated it would be when I took out the policy, IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY. This returns me the full premiums of the 15 years and over 4 per cent. compound interest, in addition to which you have carried the risk upon my life. In view of the lower ing rates of interest which have been obtainable during the latter portion of the period, it is difficult to see how this excellent result could have been surpassed.

Yours sincerely,

A Woman's Crime.

A THRILLING STORY OF LOVE AND ADVENTURE.

By LAWRENCE M. LYNCH.

Author of "John Arthur's Ward," "The Diamond Coterie," "Against Odds," Etc., Etc.

They go up a flight of stairs, pausing midway at a door which swings open at their approach; the door is massive, and presents a battered appearance, and near the top is a little sliding panel, through which one, standing two steps higher on the inside, could take observations. This door opens on hinges that are stout springs, and a coloured servant holds it back with some effort. They pass this portal, which Lenore scans wonderingly, and arrive at the landing; here the carpets are like dark moss, and a tall man, plainly-dressed, and wearing an expression of habitual gravity, awaits them.

Hurriedly Arteveldt performs the ceremony of introduction, so hurriedly that Lenore does not catch the name of the tall man, and then the three pass up another flight of softly-carpeted stairs, along a broad dimly-lighted passage, and into a room rich in upholstery, glowing with rare flowers, adorned with pictures, cabinets, bookcases, bronzes, all that wealth could purchase, and all in faultless taste. This was the home of no ordinary gambler; Gentleman Jeff had some claim to his title.

Here waited Jess Warren, Carrie VanBuren, and a young man with pale hair, and paler eyelids, Mr. Williams—the friend of "Uncle Jeff."

It was a very pleasant party; everybody talked and everybody laughed. "Uncle Jeff," the least of the party, perhaps, but then he was not a man to laugh at doubtful wit. Lenore soon decided upon this, and her keen eye saw that her host was inclined to be quietly amused and somewhat sarcastic at the expense of the widow and his niece. Lenore was a trifle surprised at this, but felt, nevertheless, almost tempted to encourage him in it—any woman can tell you why. She does not feel much drawn toward Mr. Williams. He laughs more than he talks, and has not a keen look by any means. Nevertheless Mr. Williams is a cunning young man, otherwise he would not be the friend of Gentleman Jeff.

Presently, surprisingly soon, dinner is served. It is sent from an adjacent restaurant, and noiseless waiters bring in a table, a queer-looking table, covered with green baize, upon which they spread a snowy cloth. It is a faultless dinner, and Lenore Armyn, seated beside her courteous and entertaining host, thinks that bachelor hospitality is a fine thing. She thinks that there is an unusual amount of champagne at this dinner, and that Jess and her friend are drinking of it rather freely. But "bachelors can't be expected to know what is proper at a dinner like this," she thinks; and she drinks no wine herself, although so often urged by Jess and young Arteveldt.

At last dessert is on the table, and now the drama is interrupted by a farce, not counted upon by the conspirators. In the hall, voices are heard in loud altercation, and in another moment the door is flung open, and an elderly man appears upon the threshold. The host looks up, and utters an exclamation of astonishment.

"Colonel," he says, quickly, "what is the matter? Come in."

"What is the matter!" cries the man, excitedly. "The police are coming! You will be raided within three minutes!"

CHAPTER XIII.

THE FARCE AND DRAMA IN A GAMBLER'S DEN.

The scene that follows this startling announcement is indescribable. All seem panic-stricken; but the terror of Jess Warren, Carrie VanBuren, and Mr. Williams passes all bounds.

Miss VanBuren is in violent hysterics. Jess runs distractedly from window to window; and finally flings herself upon the broad chest of the gray-haired newsbearer, imploring him to save her. But the conduct of Mr. Williams is still more extraordinary; he is running about the room, half-bent, peering under chairs, lounges, everything; trying to wrench open cabinet doors, and peer into various drawers, in a distracted effort to secrete himself in impossible places.

"Oh! hide me, Jeff," he implores, tragically. "Don't let me be taken; it would be my ruin. Tell them I never gamble, Jeff! Oh, why did you ask me to come here to meet these wicked women?"

But Jeff is standing erect and silent, watching the three with a queer look in his eyes.

"Hurry, Jeff," cries the elderly man, making a movement as if about to shoulder Jess. "Bring along the women, we will drop them out of the back window, it's not more than forty feet."

Jess utters a scream of terror, and Clarence Arteveldt, who has been standing motionless and bewildered, starts forward involuntarily. But Mr. Williams makes a frantic dash at the speaker.

"Take me!" he cries, holding out two angular arms. "Save me, do, dear man! drop me, carefully, down first! I'm so young to be caught in a gambling house! Don't let me be arrested!"

"Oh! oh! oh!" shrieks Miss VanBuren, who is kicking vigorously; "take me out, take me out, don't let me be arrested; open the window and let me jump!"

At the moment of the alarm, they have sprung from the table as by one impulse—all except Lenore Armyn. That young lady has not stirred. She sits in her place, gazing from one to another, with an expression of the most absolute wonder upon her face; but not one shade of fear. She turns her gaze upon the host; he does not look like a frightened man.

"What does it mean, sir," she says, somewhat imperiously. "The police—and all this talk of arrest; what has that young man done?"

But Gentleman Jeff does not hear her. His eyes are fixed upon that magnificent impromptu comedian, his friend Williams, whose gymnastics are indeed wonderful, and his features are convulsed with some strong emotion, which he in vain endeavours to suppress.

Lenore turns her eyes towards Mr. Williams, and a scornful smile curls her lip. What he says of the gambling house is unnoted by her then; the comedy begins to explain itself; she has not read the riddle of the drama as yet. It has all transpired in an instant; as she again turns toward Gentleman Jeff, his composure utterly deserts him; with a shout of merriment he falls back in his chair and shakes with pent-up laughter. The shout is echoed by the "Colonel," who, dropping Jess without ceremony, wipes the perspiration from his ruddy face, and shouts in his turn. Slowly the colour returns to the countenance of Clarence Arteveldt, and by degrees the shrieks of the two women grow less. Mr. Williams is the last to recover his presence of mind.

"Won't we be arrested?" he whines, piteously. "Won't anybody know that I am in a gambling house?"

"In a gambling house." Lenore comprehends the words now, for the first time. For an instant her face is ghastly in its pallor; then she turns away and waits in silence for the end of the comedy, in which she has no part.

Long and loud is the laughter of the two gamblers. She sees Clarence Arteveldt becoming suddenly fierce as he confronts the man addressed as "Colonel."

"Curse you," he cries, wrathfully. "Have you played this shameful trick upon us? upon me? How dare you create such a panic; see how you have frightened these women!"

"Women?" Carrie VanBuren begins to recover suddenly, and Jess releases the luckless Colonel.

Then it is not true; their private disgrace will not be made public property. There is a chorus of questions, recriminations, exclamations. Mr. Williams suddenly ceases his dramatic efforts, and comes over to Jeff.

"You put the Colonel up to that dodge, old man," he said, flinging himself into his lately-abandoned seat with a laugh. "By the powers, but it almost fooled me for just a minute." And Gentlemen Jeff laughs, as he replies:—

"Well, perhaps. But you have mistaken your calling, Williams; you should go on the stage."

It takes a long time for the party to regain their composure, and Jess and Carrie are full of wrath because they have been made so ridiculous, but at last they are partially calmed. Then for the second time Lenore Armyn, moving forward, addresses her host:—

"Sir, I am here as your guest. Tell me, is this a gambling house?"

Gentleman Jeff looked down at her in unfeigned surprise. "Did you not know it?" he asked.

"If I had," retorted she, bitterly, "I should not be here. For Heaven's sake tell me what sort of people are these who have brought me here—these women?"

His face became stern.

"Did these two women and this man bring you here by un. ir means? Did you not know I was a gambler?"

"No."

"Well," without even a glance at the others, "it is not the first time they have been here. If you shrink from contact with a gambler, you should shrink from them. They have entrapped you. If I had known their game it would never have been played. Shall I send you away now; you will not remain with them?"

Lenore's eyes are blazing now with the light that Jess knew so well. It was thus she looked when she struck down the burly German. Involuntarily the two plotting women draw near together, and away from Clarence Arteveldt, as if to let him bear the burden of their united iniquity alone. Every eye is fixed upon Lenore, as the gambler awaits her answer. The two men, who do not yet quite understand the scene, are deeply interested. What will she do? what will she say? all are auditors, and all interested, although in different degrees. For a time, a long time, it seems to them all, she says nothing, only her eyes speak unutterable things. Then she speaks, and they are astonished to hear her voice so calm. Calm! it is like the clear ring of fine steel.

"No! I will not go—yet. You say I have been entrapped. Then it must have been for a purpose. Will you give me the right to command in your kingdom for a few moments?"

"I will."

"Then tell those women to leave this room; and your friends as well, I—"

Suddenly Clarence Arteveldt steps forward. "Miss Armyn," he says, hurriedly, "let me speak with you alone. I can explain all this to you. I can make it as if it had never been."

"You?" The word falls on him like a lash.

He turns toward the gambler. "For God's sake, Jeff, let me speak to her alone!"

Gentleman Jeff again turns to Lenroe, "It must be as she says," he replies, coldly.

"Let him have his way," she answers. It is strange, that icy voice, together with the eyes of fire.

Obedient to the gesture of the gambler, they file slowly and silently from the room. As Jess passes Clarence Arteveldt, she whispers, "Be a man now, or all is lost."

When the door has closed, and they are alone together, these two face each other in silence. Still the lurid light burns in the girl's eyes, still her lips are colourless.

Clarence Arteveldt has nerved himself for this, has been drinking deeply, to prepare himself for this interview. Let come what will he must not falter now, that would be to make himself doubly despised. There is an awful stillness in the room, and then her incisive voice says, "I am waiting."

He would approach her, but she motions him back.

"Stand where you are," she says, "and speak; my patience is not boundless."

"Nor is mine," he breaks in abruptly, yet obeying her. "My patience was exhausted. I loved you; I asked you to be my wife. You refused. You thought I had given you up. Instead, I was planning to win you in spite of yourself. There was but one way, and I took it. You will say that it was dishonourable. I know that! I would do more to win you. I have lured you here—into a gambler's den. As we came up the steps George Fordham was so near that he saw us enter. Your friend, Kate Seaton, saw you too. You and I, alone, were visiting a gambler's den. What can they think? You know as well as I. But there is a safe way out of this. Let me go now and seek Fordham; let me say to him, 'Miss Armyn is my promised wife.' Say yourself, to Kate Seaton, 'Clarence is to be my husband,' and all is well. In this republican city one may visit even such a place as this, with one's affianced. Once more I ask you to be my wife. I offer you riches and love."

"And—if I refuse, I shall be slandered to my dearest friends; all who have known me as the friend of the Ruthvens will know that I have been a gambler's guest—for the sake of the two good women under his roof Charles Ruthven must turn from his door that base woman, Jess Warren, and myself; when I go forth, this stigma will follow me; I can not escape from it. And—I am alone in the world. This is what you would tell me."

It is strange to hear her say these things in that calm, frozen way.

"You think my statement as to how I was decoyed here would weigh as nothing against the fact of my presence in such a place. That the man who is master here would not aid me to set myself right in the eyes of my friends," she continued.

"I think that you would only blacken yourself by selecting a professed gambler for your champion; that would only be to link your name with his," replied the young man, doggedly.

For the first time she faltered. She reeled as if about to fall.

"Say one word," he urged. "Say that I may straightway announce our engagement. Think how I must love you, to have done this. Should I not have some reward for such devotion?"

Strange that such words should restore her courage, her outward calm. One moment she seemed to ponder, then she said, as if thinking aloud, "Yes. Such devotion should be rewarded—amply rewarded. Such debts of gratitude should be paid to the uttermost."

"Then say yes," he urges, blindly. "Say you will be my wife."

Slowly she makes answer. "I am at your mercy—now. You can blast my honour—or save it. I realize my peril and your power. I choose to save my honour, even if to do it I must wed dishonour. Clarence Arteveldt, you shall be rewarded! I will marry you."

TWIN TORTURERS!

Lumbago and Rheumatism made Harmless by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Lumbago and Rheumatism cause endless pain and suffering. Every man and woman who runs chances of getting wet, or catching cold, is liable to suffer from one or both. Our hospitals are full of sufferers from these diseases; none are more painful. Every nerve is on fire; every joint is a centre of agony; every muscle an area of torture. To move hand or foot makes the victim shriek with agony.

Rheumatism makes more cripples than all the railroad accidents that ever happened. Twisted, mis-shapen caricatures of humanity, who cannot walk without misery, are to be seen every day. The kidneys are to blame. If they are healthy you needn't fear Rheumatism or Lumbago. Dodd's Kidney Pills keep the kidneys healthy and cure Rheumatism and Lumbago.

Time is Nearly up.

This is the week of weeks! Pre-eminently and emphatically the holiday shoppers' week. The week when the most dilatory of buyers must close their negotiations with Santa Claus. The enthusiasm of the crowds at the Peterborough Book Store is unbounded, and the people all like it. Nothing we've ever done begins to equal what we're doing now. A holiday halo illumes this store as if Christmas electricity had struck the place. Christmas chances broaden—competition ceases—and the happy crowds tell better than anything else the relation of the store to the community. The business is on closest touch with the people. Only a few days more on the calendar. How the time will fly! You have barely time to make out your list and select your presents. Shop early at the Peterborough Bookstore and the time spent will be spent in pleasure. Storm the store! Hundreds have been served already out of our princely stock, but heaps of good things are still left.—A. H. STRATTON & Co.

Great interest is being shown in the approaching municipal elections. Nomination on Monday, Dec. 26, at the usual place.

The Christmas tree and entertainment under the auspices of Mark street Sunday school, to be held in the new town hall, on Monday evening, Dec. 26, beginning at 7.30, promises to be very successful. Any who wish may place presents on the tree for their friends.

Rev. H. T. Crossley and Rev. S. J. Shorey will preach the Mark street Sunday school anniversary sermons next Sunday morning and evening respectively. In the morning the centre seats will be reserved for members of the school, who are expected to come at least ten minutes early so as to be seated properly before eleven o'clock.

17,000 MILES IN RUSSIA.

Man From President McKinley's State Gives Utterance to Some New Ideas on a Somewhat Hackneyed Subject.

London, Dec. 23.—John W. Bookwalter of Ohio, who has just returned from a three months' journey through Russia, told the correspondent of the Associated Press in an interview yesterday that he enjoyed unusual facilities for observing what is going on in that country. He travelled 17,000 miles to the terminus of the Trans-Siberian Railway, to the end of the line, reaching the frontier of Afghanistan, and to the end of the one penetrating China through Manchuria. All these are now practically completed.

Mr. Bookwalter was allowed to go everywhere, to see everything and to take hundreds of photographs, thanks to special permits issued to him by the Minister of the Interior on the application of the United States Ambassador at St. Petersburg. During his journey he conversed with the Governors of provinces and with military and civil officials of all ranks.

"America's best open door to Central Asia and China," said Mr. Bookwalter, "is through Russia. A great surprise to the world is in preparation in that part of the earth, and it will come, I believe, very soon. Not many years will elapse before the world will see Russia, England and China combining for the partition of Asia. The very force of circumstances will bring this about. England and Russia will never be able to agree on a partition of China between themselves. Still less will they allow the other powers to share with them in the spoils of that Empire. They will be forced to defend China, which alone is helpless against the rest of the world, and to share with her the dominion of Asia.

"The alliance of England, Russia and China—of two-thirds of the human race—will be such an alliance as history has never yet seen, and it will be one which will give peace to the world for centuries. All its interests will make for peace, and it will be able to dictate terms to the rest of the world.

"America has very little to gain by an open door to China. That country is an industrial one, and whatever we may now be able to sell to them the Chinese will soon be able to make for themselves. One day, and that day is near at hand, whatever China buys from the rest of the world will reach her through Russia and Central Asia.

"Russia in the last three years has done more to open the doors of China than England and all the rest of the world, has done in fifty years. No one, who has not seen it with his own eyes, can have the faintest conception of what Russia has done and is still doing in Central Asia.

"I have traveled over the twelve hundred miles of railway which she has built from the Caspian Sea to Tashkend, in Turkestan, over a branch of this line, which runs to the northern frontier of India over another branch, which goes from Merv to the border of Afghanistan. This last branch was not completed when I was there, but it will be open to traffic next week. There are also Russian lines all along the Persian frontier and penetrating into that country, either completed or rapidly approaching completion. All the work on these lines has been done by soldiers, who, in this way, are not in Russia, as elsewhere, non-producers.

"All this tremendous Asiatic railway system is owned and operated by the Government. All the lines are admirably built and splendidly equipped. I saw a bridge across the Amudaria, in Central Asia, at a point where the river is three miles wide, that cost 20,000,000 roubles and is the greatest piece of engineering work ever accomplished. There is nothing like it anywhere else in the world, the celebrated Forth bridge, near Edinburgh, not excepted.

"Wherever I went I saw cities and towns springing up, such as Askabad, in Turkomania, for example, which already has 25,000 inhabitants. Near Merv the Czar is building a magnificent palace. New Bokhara, 12 miles from old Bokhara, has 12,000 inhabitants. The Russian policy in Central Asia is not to bring the new and the old into too close a contrast, and so she builds her railway stations a few miles away from the old centres of population, thus forming new and entirely modern centres. Where do the people come from to inhabit these towns? Why, from European Russia. The Government is turning her surplus European population into Central Asia just as the United States turned the surplus population of her Atlantic States into her great Western territories. What I have just seen in Central Asia is almost an exact reproduction of what I witnessed years ago in Illinois Indiana and Missouri, when the emigrants from the East were pouring into the West. No human power can stay the onward march of the Slav through Russia into Asia, which will be the feature of the twentieth century, just as the march of the Anglo-Saxon through America has been the feature of the nineteenth.

"Already, thanks to her railways, Russia can at any time pour her armies across the frontiers of India by the same routes that Alexander, Tamerlane and Kubla Khan marched to the conquest of Eastern Asia. Russia to-day has 25,000,000 trained

BRITISH CHINAMEN.

H. M. "First Chinese" Regiment Will Be 1,000 Strong.

SPAIN HAS YIELDED UP ILOILO.

The Yemen Rebellion Becoming Formidable—Britain Through French Spectacles—Think It Is Now After Spain—The Dreyfus Secret Documents—Couldn't Find Andree.

London, Dec. 28.—The new Chinese regiment formed under Her Majesty's colors will be known as the "First Chinese Regiment," will be 1,000 strong and divided into ten companies. The men will be collected within the ten-mile British limit from the Shantung Province. The regiment will be for general service and available wherever required, and not for Wei Hai Wei alone. A distinctive uniform will be provided. For winter wear the officers will have a fur kit similar to that worn by the Canadian troops. The regiment will be in command of Col. Bower. The drill instructors are now en route for Hong Kong.

Has Iloilo Been Surrendered?

Madrid, Dec. 28.—General Rios, the Spanish commander in the Visayas Islands, has telegraphed to the Government from Iloilo, capital of the Island of Panay, under date of Dec. 24, as follows: "Am preparing to embark on the steamer Leo XIII. for Zamboanga, Island of Mindinao, having yesterday (Dec. 23) formally surrendered Iloilo, in the presence of the military and naval commanders, the mayor and foreign consuls. Have charged the German consul with the protection of Spanish interests. Shall arrive at Manila by the end of this month."

Though the despatch is ambiguous, it is assumed here that the surrender of Iloilo was to the Americans.

A Philippine Republic.

Madrid, Dec. 28.—Certain of the Madrid papers are predicting that early in the year President McKinley will recognize a republic in the Philippine Islands.

The Yemen Rebellion.

Cairo, Dec. 28.—A letter received from Yemen states that the rebellion there has assumed formidable dimensions. Thirty thousand Turkish troops are preparing to attack the rebels, who are well armed, though they have only two cannon. Several severe engagements have already been fought, but no decisive action. Mohamed Ibu Hamed el Din, the rebel leader, who resembles the Mahdi, is stirring up the tribes against the Turks. He acts despotically himself and has secret agents at Turkish headquarters in Sana, who keep him well informed. An attempt was recently made to assassinate the Mufti of Sana, while publicly praying. The Turkish authorities are now introducing reforms, especially in taxation, which was the cause of the discontent. Strict precautions are being taken to keep the news of the rebellion from spreading.

THROUGH FRENCH SPECTACLES.

A French Paper Thinks Mother Country Is After Spain.

Paris, Dec. 28.—The Madrid correspondent of Le Journal des Debats, in last evening's issue, devotes much attention to Angle-Spanish relations, which now are generally considered rather strained. This writer sees danger to Spain in the concentration of a large British fleet at Gibraltar, and continues: "I have heard from a good source that the Spanish Government in the first months of the present year felt constrained, for reasons of prudence, on an intimation from the British Government, to suspend the works of defense which had been begun at Sierra Carbonaros, because England pretended that they were meant to menace Gibraltar."

The same correspondent asserts that the British ambassador at Madrid suggested to the Spanish Cabinet the fortification of the Balearic Isles, and adds: "The conclusion is drawn that England wishes to station men-of-war at one of the ports of these islands or near by, so as to be ready immediately to debark soldiers in case of a European war, as this would be the important point to occupy."

In other words, it is insinuated that England asks Spain to build fortifications for England's eventual benefit. This well illustrates the exceedingly suspicious view taken of England at this moment in continental Europe. Yet, who would deny that there is much ground therefor?

The Dreyfus Secret Documents.

Paris, Dec. 28.—The Premier, M. Dupuy, the Minister of War, M. de Freycinet, and the president of the Court of Cassation M. Loew, have finally agreed that the secret documents in the Dreyfus case are to be taken to the Court of Cassation by Captain Cuignet every morning the court applies for them, and they are to be returned the same night.

Couldn't Find Andree.

Stockholm, Dec. 28.—The expedition that was sent out by the Swedish Government in search of Andree, the Arctic explorer, who attempted to reach the North Pole in a balloon, and who has not since been reliably heard from, has returned from Northern Siberia, where months were spent in fruitless efforts to learn the fate of Andree and his two companions.

Sir Charles Tupper's Company.

London, Dec. 28.—The Klondike Mining, Trading & Transport Company, of which Sir Charles Tupper is chairman, has just issued its report from the end of July, 1897, to the end of November, 1898. The loss on trading was nearly £27,000, the loss in connection with the Teslin route accounting for £23,000 of this. Against this loss stands as an asset shares in other companies whose nominal value amount to £47,500.

Feeling in Cape Town

Cape Town, Dec. 28.—The officials here deprecate the excitement among the British residents of Johannesburg, growing out of the killing of the Englishman, Edgar, by a Boer policeman, and say it must be assumed that justice will be done in the case.

Imperial Penny Postage.

London, Dec. 28.—Notwithstanding repeated assurances that the penny rate is available via United States points, there is still considerable uncertainty as to whether letters so sent can take advantage of the newly-instituted rate.

FEARFUL STORM IN ENGLAND.

Extraordinary Scene on the Lower Thames—Twelve Men Missing.

London, Dec. 28.—An exciting scene was witnessed yesterday at the Broadstone. A four-masted schooner, showing distress signals, was seen drifting ashore. A rowboat, with a pilot on board, attempted to reach her, but was unsuccessful. Then a lifeboat attempted to reach the four-master, but was unable to do so. Finally tugs succeeded in getting near enough to get a tow line to her, and she was towed out of danger.

An extraordinary scene was presented along the lower Thames, where the gale is the most severe of any that has occurred since 1873. Hundreds of men are employed in chasing bales, boxes, casks and articles of every description, which have been blown from the wharves and sent adrift. Four barges were swept out to sea and lost. The general damage done by the storm is very great.

Twelve men are missing, and it is reported that they have been drowned.

Catholic University for Ireland.

London, Dec. 28.—An Irish Catholic layman writes to the Daily News advocating the establishment of a Catholic university in Ireland. He cites in support of his scheme the example set in Canada.

Dr. Eugene McKay of Papineauville, was sentenced to one year in the penitentiary for indecent assault on Mrs. Parisien of Papineauville.

Andre Riopelle of Eardley was sentenced to four years for manslaughter, the victim being L. Boyer, a farmer in Eardley.

Railway Earnings.

Toronto, Dec. 28.—The earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway for the week ending December 21 were $550,000, as compared with $444,000 for the same week last year, an increase of $6,000. Grand Trunk earnings in the same period were $469,000 this year and $499,230 last year, a decrease of $30,229.

Drowned in Toronto Bay.

Toronto, Dec. 28.—Shortly after 3 o'clock yesterday a punt, occupied by Fred Dickerson and Charles Martin, two 17-year-old boys, was upset close to the Toronto Ferry Co.'s wharf at Hanlan's Point. Martin was rescued by John Hanlan, but Dickerson was drowned.

Canadian General in German Army.

Berlin, Dec. 28.—The only Canadian general in the German army is Lieut.-General George Eyl, a native of Halifax, N.S. Yesterday he celebrated the 60th anniversary of his entrance into the Imperial German service.

TWO BYE-ELECTIONS.

Mr. Loughrin, Liberal, Returned by Over 600 Majority.

FRENCH VOTE IN NIPISSING.

Mr. Breder's Appeals Answered in the Negative—The Election in North Hastings—Mr. Allen, Conservative, at Present About 600 Votes Ahead, But the North Is Not Heard From.

North Bay, Dec. 28.—The campaign in Nipissing that was brought to such a successful conclusion yesterday, resulting in the triumphant election of the Liberal candidate, Mr. John Loughrin, by a majority of over 600, was one of the most hotly contested that has ever taken place in Ontario. The Conservative candidate was supported by a small army of workers, led by Mr. Klock, M.P., and Mr. Broder, M.P., who not only appealed to the prejudices of the French electors to vote for Mr. Lamarche on account of his nationality, but against the Government on account of its alleged parsimony in the expenditure of public money in this district. The answer to the first-named appeal came in the form of a majority of votes for Mr. Loughrin from the French population, and the expression of their faith in the honesty of the Government in a magnificent majority of over 600 for the Government candidate in the district. At a large gathering here last night congratulatory speeches were delivered to an enthusiastic crowd of Liberals by Messrs. Mackenzie of Sudbury, Preston and Bishop of Toronto. The full returns are not yet in, but the latest indicate that Mr. Loughrin's majority is over 600.

570 With 10 Places to Hear From.

Madoc, Ont., Dec. 28.—The election in North Hastings yesterday resulted in the return of Mr. W. J. Allen, the Conservative candidate for the Legislature, by a large majority. Thirty out of the 40 polling sub-divisions heard from give him a majority of 570. His opponent was Mr. B. O. Lott. At the general election Mr. Allen had a majority of 206.

Former Contests.

A glance at the vote polled in some of the past elections in North Hastings shows how strong Conservatism is in that riding. At the general election of 1886 the total votes cast were: A. F. Wood, Conservative, 1,863; Dr. Faulkner, Liberal, 1,100. In 1890 A. F. Wood, Conservative, was returned by acclamation. In 1894 the Liberals again did not put up a candidate, and the fight was between James Haggerty, Conservative, and A. F. Wood, Independent Conservative. Mr. Haggerty was elected, the vote standing 1,782-1,752. At the general election of March last the returns were: W. J. Allen, Conservative, 2,374; B. O. Lott, Liberal, 2,122; Conservative majority, 252.

TEN MESSAGES ON ONE WIRE.

All May Be Sent at One Time, Says Inventor Rowland.

Baltimore, Dec. 28.—Prof. Henry T. Rowland of Johns Hopkins University will test his multiplex telegraph apparatus this week, endeavoring to send four messages simultaneously to Pittsburg and to receive at the same time here four messages from that city.

The instrument may be called a printing telegraph instrument. It enables several messages to be sent and received at the same time from the same or separate points over the same wire; it renders "wire-tapping" an impossibility and is not affected by the weather.

Sending instruments are fitted with keyboards, like typewriters. Their number is the same as that of the messages that it may be desirable to send simultaneously. Eight is the regular number of messages that the instrument is designed to handle at once, but ten could be taken without inconvenience. Each keyboard must have an operator.

At the receiving station the Rowland receiver performs its work without human aid. The eight messages are automatically separated and distributed to six instruments. These print out the messages as fast as received.

At present Dr. Rowland's instruments are fitted to print on ribbons of paper, such as those used in the familiar "ticker," but his perfected machine will print the messages on sheets of paper of any desirable shape and size. Hitherto there never has been a successful attempt to attain this result.

Ontario's Health.

Toronto, Dec. 28.—The monthly report of the Provincial Board of Health presents the following figures: For the year 1898 there were in October 89 deaths from diphtheria, 54 from typhoid, and 158 from tuberculosis. In November, '98, the figures are 59, 50 and 16, a notable increase in diphtheria, but a decrease in typhoid fever and tuberculosis. In November of 1897 there were 14 deaths from scarlet fever, 43 from diphtheria, 84 from typhoid, and 129 from tuberculosis. The population reporting last year was 867 per cent., this year it is for November, 979 per cent.

The Printers Were Beaten.

Buffalo, N.Y., Dec. 28.—Justice Spring has handed down his decision in the fight between the Buffalo Express and Typographical Union No. 9. He refused to vacate the injunction granted by Justice Childs restraining the labor men from boycotting the Express or its advertisers. Justice Spring, in his opinion, holds that the action of the union men was unwarranted and inimical to the interests of bread winners.

"Bab" Is Dead.

She was one of the editors of the Ladies' Home Journal. Her career as a writer began 16 years ago in Baltimore, and her early struggles to make a living for herself were full of disappointments.

Acute Rheumatism

Pains in the Foot and Limb—A Complete Cure Accomplished by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"For a number of years I was afflicted with acute rheumatism in my left side and all the way down my limb into my foot. I live five blocks from my work and had to stop and rest several times in going and coming. I could get no relief from my trouble and was on the point of giving up my job when I happened to hear of Hood's Sarsaparilla. I purchased a bottle of this medicine and a vial of Hood's Pills and began taking them. Before I had half finished them I was relieved and it was not long before I was completely cured. I never lose an opportunity to praise Hood's Sarsaparilla, for my cure meant a great deal to me, as I have a family and must always be at my post." A VILLERS PRESENTATION.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Villiers' Y. P. S. C. E. held a very interesting meeting on Tuesday evening, Dec. 20th.

In the absence of the President the chair was taken by Miss Bathgate, Vice-President of the Society. The topic, "How to enjoy our religion," was taken Mr. R. W. Weir, who handled it in a very able manner, urging all to accept Christ and so partake of the joy which the world can neither give nor take away. The hymn, "We all shall meet in Heaven at last," was then sung by a few members of the society, after which Mr. Alex Gillespie conducted the prayer meeting.

Mr. R N. Weir, who has been teaching school here for the past two years and is now leaving, was called to the platform and Miss Annie Weir read the following address:

DEAR FRIEND:—We regret very much your departure from among us and trust that in your new field of labour you will remember the many pleasant meetings we have had together in Villers sch ol house. Your faithful services as day-school teacher have been appreciated by both parents and pupils. As a Sabbath-school teacher and Christian Endeavourer you have been faithful to your duties, labouring diligently in this part of our Master's vineyard, and we trust that as you are leaving us, you will still be faithful to the Master's work, knowing that to the faithful the reward is sure. As a mark of the esteem in which we hold you please accept this token of our regard along with our best wishes for your future welfare and happiness.

Signed on behalf of the Public School, Sunday School and Y. P. S. C. E.,

WM. BATHGATE,
MRS BROUGH,
ANNIE BATHGATE.

Miss P. Harris then presented Mr. Weir with a handsome writing desk and shaving set. Mr. Weir thanked the people for their kind remembrance, deeply regretting his unworthiness of it.

The meeting then closed by singing "God be with you till we meet again" and repeating the Mispah benediction.

YOUNG'S POINT.

Mrs. Wm. McFarlance has been ill the past two weeks with a very severe cold.

Mr. Harry Kearney is confined to the house with bronchitis, but is recovering.

There seems to be an epidemic going round having the symptoms of la grippe. Quite a number have been ill with it.

Mr. W. J. Young, who has been ill the past two weeks, is recovering.

Miss Jennie Kearney retured from Chicago last week.

The repairs to the locks by the Ontario Government are about completed. One feature of the work is a pier 245x20 feet on the west side of the canal, and is a great improvement. The work was under the supervision of Mr. Alex. Ross, of Lindsay, who had a number of men from around the Point employed.

High mass was celebrated at midnight on Christmas eve in St. Mary's church here. This is the first opportunity the parishioners have had of hearing midnight mass at Christmas, and the congregation all received Holy Communion. Rev. Father Fitzpatrick preached an eloquent sermon after mass. The choir supplied excellent music for the occasion.

The high respect and esteem in which Rev. Father Fitzpatrick is held here, was shown by the splendid donation which he received from his congregation on Christmas morning.

Services were held in the English church here on Christmas morning and evening, and were attended by a large number. Rev. Mr. Creswick officiated.

The school closed on Friday, the 23rd inst, and will re-open on Tuesday, January 3rd. On Friday afternoon, the pupils showing their respect for their teacher, Mr. M. Carroll, presented him with an elegant hand-painted photograph case. During the short time that Mr. Carroll has conducted the school he has displayed the energy and efficiency necessary for a thorough teacher, and had he remained it is certain that the school would have attained a high degree of efficiency, with the progress it has already made under his able instruction. The following is a copy of the address:

Mr. M. J. Carroll:

DEAR TEACHER,—The teachers of S. S. No. 8, Smith, having heard with regret that you are about to leave us, take this opportunity of expressing to you our appreciation of your manly kindness and generous efforts in our behalf.

We had learned ere you came among us of your brilliant work as a student, and your great success as a teacher, and we had therefore every reason to feel assured of our progress under your care. We have not been disappointed. Three months, honest earnest work have proved the truth of what we heard and realized our every hope. And now that we are rapidly advancing in our studies. We are sorry that circumstances should cause you to leave us. In other and larger fields you will find more ample scope for your ability and learning.

We would ask you at the same time to accept this small present as an expression of our love and esteem, as a token of our gratitude and as a slight mark of our appreciation of your kindness and attention during your all too short stay among us. With this we couple our best wishes for a very pleasant Christmas and continued happiness during the New Year now dawning upon us.

Engine and Cars Ditched.

Owen Sound, Dec. 28.—The Grand Trunk passenger train leaving here at 6.30 yesterday morning met with an accident near Brooke station. Two locomotives were attached and the second one left the rails, dragging the baggage car and passenger coach with it into the ditch. The cars were badly smashed up and the mail bags caught fire, a considerable amount of mail matter being destroyed before the flames were extinguished. The rails were torn up for about 150 yards. No one was seriously hurt, and the passengers were sent forward by a special train, made up at Palmerston. The tremendous amount of snow was the cause of the trouble.

Alexandria Bay, N.Y., Dec 28.—Tuesday noon three of the children of Charles Hagerman were playing on the ice off the north shore of Wells' Island, in the St Lawrence River, when it broke, and they all fell in and were drowned. Mrs. Hagerman rushed to the scene, and, in her endeavors to rescue the children, broke through the ice, and she, too, was drowned. SAVED SIX LIVES.

A 16-Year-Old New York Boy Saves His Mother and Five Children From the Flames.

New York, Dec. 28.—Joseph Brady, aged 16, is in Flower Hospital in a critical condition, after having saved six lives from death by fire. His father, Louis Brady, was in his baker shop at 87 East 99th street at work early yesterday morning, when fire broke out in the apartments overhead. Joseph's mother and five children became paralyzed with fright, and, unable to move, clung screaming together in a back room. Young Joseph dragged his mother, half-choked by the blinding smoke, to a rear window and hoisted her out. He carried the children, one by one, and dropped them through the window, which was but one storey high. Then he went through the smoke and flames once more, perhaps not sure that all were out. When he turned to retreat, he found the way barred by flames. Rushing through the front of the house, he reached the plate-glass door that opened up on the stairs which led to the street. The door was locked, so he smashed it with his fist. The jagged glass tore his wrist, and the blood spurted out from the severed artery. When he reached the street he was almost helpless from his exertions and loss of blood. The police had arrived by this time, and Joseph was hurried to the hospital. He may recover.

THE PARSLOW TRIAL.

The Murder Trial at St. Scholastique, Quebec. Soon to End.

St. Scholastique, Que., Dec. 28.—In the Parslow murder trial nearly a score of witnesses have been examined for the defence, and it was freely testified that Sam Parslow had borne a good character, but was easily led.

Mr. Ethier, counsel for the defence, made a strong appeal to the jury on behalf of his client. He pleaded his previous good character. The woman had led him into the crime, and it was probable that Parslow was not in the chamber when the tragedy occurred. Mr. Ethier concluded at 20 minutes past 5 o'clock, having spoken for over five hours. The court then adjourned until the morning.

It is likely that to-day will finish the Parslow trial, as there only remains Mr. McKay's address on behalf of the Crown, and the charge by Judge Taschereau.

A Helpless Invalid.

A Chatham Lady Prostrated by Severe Kidney Disease, Restored to Perfect Health by Doan's Kidney Pills.

With your food or with your clothing you may perhaps experiment—if you have money to throw away—but with disease, especially Kidney Disease, it is too serious a matter to trifle with. If your Kidneys are diseased or disordered, get the right remedy at the outset — Doan's Kidney Pills. They can cure you as effectually as they did Mrs. L. Montague, residing at the corner of Selkirk street and Victoria avenue, Chatham, Ont., who speaks as follows:

"Several years ago I was taken ill with a severe pain in the small of my back. Following this I suffered very much with urinary trouble, sleeplessness, etc., and had to quit work. Medical aid proved of little avail, and I was in a most distressing condition. To add to this an almost unbearable pain ran down the back of my neck.

"I went from bad to worse until I was obliged to take to my bed, where I remained a helpless invalid for some time. At this juncture I heard of Doan's Kidney Pills and sent my boy to the drug store for a box of them, and began using them. They seemed to act directly on the weakened organs, and I was at once convinced that they were the only remedy to remove all kidney troubles. I continued taking them and day by day grew better. I gained in strength; the pain left me; I began to sleep soundly, and felt brighter and more energetic all the time. I am now better than I have been for years, and consider Doan's Kidney Pills the most excellent remedy for kidney weakness, for to them I owe my present good health and happiness.

Doan's Kidney Pills, 50c a box, or three for $1.25 at all druggists. The Doan Kidney Pill Co., Toronto, Ont.

A NEW INVENTION

The Newcombe Piano Has It.

It consists of a Patented Practice CLAVIER or STOP which diminishes the tone when required and saves wear on the Piano; it also does away with the old way of having to press down the pedal with the foot in order to soften the tone when running the scales or practicing. Oftentimes the young pupil on the piano cannot press down on the pedal without throwing themselves out of the proper position when they should sit erect. This invention in the NEWCOMBE PIANO will enable children to begin two years earlier on the piano. In addition to the above, the NEWCOMBE PIANO is the finest made in Canada. Children often complain about practicing; they like it if they have a NEWCOMBE PIANO. 1898 styles are gems of art, containing every late improvement; they possess that beautiful full sweet tone which delights the singer, and so pleases every musical ear. Organs of every description at Wholesale Prices.

Big Bargains now on hand in slightly used. Upright and Square Pianos of the various makes taken in part exchange for the famous NEWCOMBE PIANOS. Every NEWCOMBE PIANO has a new registered scale and the warranty is cast in the plate. For correct and full information regarding the new invention and NEWCOMBE PIANOS, write to our Direct Representative. Easy Prices. Liberal Terms.

IMPERIAL PENNY POSTAGE.

Popular Ignorance of the Uses of the New Stamp—Where it Will Carry Letters.

Many persons, in ignorance of the real object of the new imperial penny postage stamp, are in the habit of affixing it to letters addressed to points in the United States. This country is not a British possession and consequently the new stamp doesn't go. Letters so stamped do not go to their destination, but are sent to the dead letter office at Ottawa. If the name and address of the sender are contained in the letter it will be returned in due course to the writer. But if the letter is signed "Mamie," or "Pat," or "Jack," it remains dead forever—there is no resurrection for dead letters that do not contain name and address of writer. Over a dozen letters with the new Imperial penny stamp have been posted at the local post office for points in the United States. Of course, not being sufficiently stamped—it requires three cents to take a letter to the United States—these letters were sent to the dead letter office.

Of course if, as the post office authorities observe the name and address of the writer is placed on the upper left hand corner of the envelope, a letter or parcel insufficiently stamped or with insufficient address, can be returned to the sender, thus avoiding delay.

In order to gain fuller information for the benefit of the public, it may be stated that the two cent Imperial rate will carry letters, half ounce, to any point in the following countries and colonies embraced in the British Empire, viz.: United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, British India, Newfoundland, Natal, Jamaica, Bermuda, Barbadoes, Bahama Islands, British Guiana, British Honduras, British East Africa, British Central Africa, Niger Coast Protectorate, Niger Company's Territories, Uganda, Aden, Ascension, Sarawak, Malay States and Johore.

The Imperial two-cent stamp will not carry letters in Canada unless a one cent stamp is added. We are not rich enough in Canada to yet get the two cent boon of postage. But it will come before long.

His Life was Saved.

Mr. J. E. Lilly, a prominent citizen of Hannibal Mo., lately had a wonderful liverance from a frightful death. In telling of it he says: "I was taken with Typhoid Fever, that ran into Pneumonia. My lungs became hardened. I was so weak I couldn't even sit up in bed. Nothing helped me. I expected to soon die of Consumption, when I heard of Dr. King's New Discovery. One bottle gave great relief. I continued to use it, and now am well and strong. I can't say too much in its praise." This marvellous medicine is the surest and quickest cure in the world for all Throat and Lung Trouble. 50 cents and $1 00, at any Drug Store; every bottle guaranteed.

Remember the mass meeting of the ratepayers to be held in the Opera House on Wednesday evening, December 28th, when Mayor Davis and others will explain and discuss municipal matters relative to the town of Peterborough. Gallery reserved for ladies.

The Drawing Card.

No such opportunity has occurred for years to procure dress goods, staple dry goods and millinery of the same quality at such reasonable prices as that afforded by Messrs. R. H. Kells & Co.'s closing-out sale. In fact it is the "drawing card" of the season in this line. An imperative necessity exists for clearing the entire stock without delay on account of the firm deciding to retire from business. Cost price and even lower will not be a barrier to this sale. Holiday gift bargains is also stimulating this sale, and crowds of ladies find much that is appropriate for Christmas presents as well as regular wants. eodw

MESSRS. A. L. DAVIS AND WM. YELLAND IN THE FIELD FOR MAYOR.

The Candidates Who Will go to the Polls for Aldermen — Out of Twenty-six—Twelve Retire.

Yesterday the time expired at which nominated candidates who were so disposed could formally withdraw their names from nomination. Both mayoralty candidates are in the field and the fight for the position of first magistrate of the town is between Mr. A. L. Davis and Mr. Wm. Yelland.

THE RETIRING CANDIDATES.

The following are the candidates for aldermen who have retired from the field. Of the twenty-six nominated, the following have withdrawn from the contest:

Wm Yelland,	Adam Hall,
H L Bean,	T H Hamilton,
A Dawson,	T F Matthews,
A M Fariane,	T Cahill,
J M White,	Jas Burnett,
W L Allen,	W H Meldrum,

THE CANDIDATES WHO STAY.

This leaves as candidates for aldermen the following gentlemen, whose names will be placed on the ballot paper:

N T Lepiante,	J L Hughes,
Geo Ball,	John Corkery,
E H D Hall,	R Neill,
R S Davidson,	W Langford,
J B McWilliams,	John Sawers,
C B Robertson,	T H G Deane,
H Best,	W H Waite.

The ratepayers have an opportunity of selecting from the above fourteen candidates the men whom they think will make the best representatives. It is gratifying to see new blood introduced into the contest and to see some of the former members remaining in the field and showing their interest in municipal matters.

At the public meeting, very properly called by Mayor Davis, to-night the ratepayers will have an opportunity of hearing, doubtless, a full expression of the views of the candidates and a further opportunity of deciding upon their claims to election as aldermen for the year 1899.

A Good Corn Sheller for 25 cents.

A marvel of cheapness, of efficacy, and of Promptitude, is contained in a bottle of that famous remedy, Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. It goes right to the root of the trouble, there acts quickly but so painlessly that nothing is known of its operation until the corn is shelled. Beware of substitutes offered for Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor—safe, sure and painless. Sold at druggists.

TO THE ELECTORS

OF THE

Town of Peterborough.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:

Having been honoured with the nomination for Mayor for 1899, I respectfully solicit your votes and influence to elect me to that important and honourable office for a second term.

Besides the recognized practice in the past that the Chief Magistrate of the town should have a renewal of the confidence and support of the electors, I feel that my record during the past year entitles me to a continuance of the trust which you generously reposed in me a year ago.

During the past year I have spent a very large portion of my time and devoted my best energies to the advancement of the town and if again honoured with your support I shall continue to do my utmost to advance the material welfare of Peterborough by supporting as broad and liberal a policy in the management of its affairs as is consistent with the resources of the town and a reasonable rate of taxation, so that she may continue to keep her place among the foremost towns of the Dominion.

Wishing you a happy and prosperous year, I am

Your obedient servant,
A. L. DAVIS.

After Thoughts.

Christmas Day brings many surprises as well as after-thoughts, which it is never too late to recognize and respect.

We, ourselves, had large expectations, and they were fulfilled above our brightest hopes. We planned on a most unusual sale, but the Holiday Goods that remain tell better than anything else that our planning was none too liberal to justify the unusally liberal demands of the gift-giving season.

We are again ready for another week of big business but

Not For Profit.

This is the beginning of Clearing-up time in all the departments—a farewell to the passing year, with "LOW PRICES" hung up in each section. During the next five days will be the time to buy and extend your list of gifts.

—Bibles will be marked still closer to cost. The stock is too large and must be reduced.
—Teacher's Bibles, Pocket Bibles. Pulpit Bibles at a straight discount of 15 per cent.
—Fancy Goods of all kinds, 20 per cent discount.
—Dollar Toy Books for 80c.
—Sixty Cent Toy Books for 45c.
—Ten Cent Toy Books for 8c.
—Five Cent Toy Books for 5c.
—Dolls—A lot of very nice Dolls was slightly disarranged only by much handling during the Xmas trade, to be cleared at half former price.
—Games go at twenty-five per cent less.
—Table and Desk Ornaments at half price.
—Books of all kinds, in fancy bindings, and Picture Ornaments down to cost price.
—New Year's Cards at Cost Price.

Those who did not get what they expected, and those who were unable for any cause to shop before Xmas, come to the Peterborough Bookstore this week. There will be offered special reductions all week.

SILVER WEDDING.

Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the Wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Stubbs.

Mr. and Mrs. James Stubbs celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding at their home, 231 Dublin street, on Monday evening. About forty-five guests were present, including a few of the host of relatives and intimate friends of Mr. and Mrs. Stubbs. At 8 o'clock the company partook of the bountiful spread which had been so excellently provided.

Following this an hour or more was spent in social enjoyment, and as the evening drew to a close Rev. S. J. Shorey took charge of a short programme. The host and hostess were then congratulated and good wishes expressed in a number of short speeches given by Messrs. Shorey, R. Winch, Williamson, J. Sucee and John Sawers.

Mr. Stubbs replied in very feeling terms, and Rev. Mr. Shorey brought the pleasant evening to a close by offering prayer, prior to which the company sang "Shall we Gather at the River.

Mrs. Stubbs received a large number of silver gifts from her friends to mark the pleasant event.

A regrettable feature of the celebration was the unavoidable absence of their only son, Mr. W. J. Stubbs, of New York City, who, however, sent a telegram of congratulations and a handsome gift.

On Friday morning, December 23rd, at the rectory, Ashburnham, Rev. H. Symonds united in matrimony Mr. Wm. Patterson, town, of the machinist department of the Canadian General Electric Works, and Emma, daughter of Mr. Alfred Gill, of Smith.

The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Lillie Gill, as bridesmaid, and Mr. Charles Patterson, brother of the groom, performed the duties of best man. After the ceremony the bridal party drove to Mr. Gill's residence, and, after a sumptuous wedding breakfast, the happy pair left on a short trip to Toronto and Hamilton (the groom's former home). They returned to town on Monday and have taken up residence at 24 Albert street.

ST. JOHN'S DAY WITH THE MASONS.

A Grand Double Installation of Officers.

MANY VISITORS WERE PRESENT.

The Affair Concluded With a Banquet —The Toast List—A Pleasing Programme of Songs—The New Officers.

St. John the Evangelists Day was duly observed with Masonic honours, last evening, when the joint installation of Corinthian and Peterborough Lodges A. F. and A.M. took place.

The attendance was very large, surpassing that of any previous occasion in the history of the lodges. Visiting brethren were present from Keene, Lakefield, Havelock and other places. Both the Lakefield and Havelock lodges obtained dispensations from the Grand Lodge to postpone their installations in order to be present at the joint ceremony in Peterborough last evening. At considerable trouble Keene Lodge held its installation in the afternoon, in order that the brethren from the village might drive up to town in the evening.

At the conclusion of routine work the installation of the officers took place, being conducted by R. W. Bro. Harry Rush, Grand Junior Warden, assisted by W. B. Adam Dawson, W. Bro. R. J. Kingan, V. W. Bro. R. M. Dennistoun, W. Bro. W. H. Walkey, W. Bro. W. J. Martin, W. Bro. R. Logan and V W Bro A Gibson.

KENNEL.

Those intending to show dogs at the Bench Show here on January 11th and 12th are reminded that all entries have to be filed with the secretary at the EXAMINER Office on or before Tuesday, January 3rd. A dog to be shown does not necessarily have to possess a pedigree, but if it has not been registered with the Canadian Kennel Club it can be listed for 25 cents, which will give it the necessary standing.

A clause in the Bench Show rules provides for the opening of new classes for dogs, which are unprovided for, on condition that six entries are received for that variety. Under these circumstances a class has just been opened for Red Cockers, Mr. Alex. Beattie, of Hamilton making the necessary six entries.

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION.

Mr. Williams Leaving School Section No. 7, Smith.

Mr. D. A. Williams, who has been teaching in school section No. 7, Smith, for the last four and a half years, was pleasantly remembered last week, when he was presented with a handsome Bible, accompanied by the following address:

To Mr. D. A. Williams:

DEAR MR. WILLIAMS,—The time has come when we, as a League, must say farewell to you who have been one of our most earnest and active workers. We feel that we cannot allow this occasion to pass without expressing, in some form, the regret we all feel that we are about to lose the help you have always given to us so cheerfully. We shall miss your assistance in our meetings. We shall miss your co-operation in Sunday school work, and we shall miss above all the example you have always given of a manly fearless, unselfish Christian life. In parting we desire to express the wish that God's blessing will continue to rest upon you in your new field of labour, and that He will ever give you help and guidance along the pathway of life.

In conclusion we ask you to accept of this Bible as a very slight token of the appreciation we all feel of your assistance to us in League, Sunday school and church work.

Signed on behalf of the Sunday School, Epworth League,
MR. A. NORTHEY. MR. P. G. MIGHT.

The woman who is lovely in face, form and temper will always have friends, but one who would be attractive must keep her health. If she is weak, sickly and all run down, she will be nervous and irritable. If she has constipation or kidney trouble, her impure blood will cause pimples, blotches, skin eruptions and a wretched complexion. Electric Bitters is the best medicine in the world to regulate stomach, liver and kidneys and to purify the blood. It gives strong nerves, bright eyes, smooth, velvety skin, rich complexion. TO THE ELECTORS
—OF THE—
TOWN OF PETERBOROUGH.

Having been urged by many of the ratepayers of the town to become a candidate for Alderman, I have accepted the nomination.

I therefore beg leave to ask for your support, and, if elected, pledge myself to safeguard the interests of the town to the best of my ability.

Being a large property holder in the town, my interest in the honest management of municipal affairs should be a sufficient guarantee that I will always favour the most careful economy—at the same time exercising my best judgment in promoting the growth, progress and prosperity of the town.

Yours respectfully,
NOAH T. LePLANTE.

December, 27th, 1898.

TO THE ELECTORS.

GENTLEMEN,—I beg to thank my mover and seconder for their kindness in nominating me for the position of Alderman for 1899.

I wish, however, to withdraw my name as there are plenty of good men in the field whom I would prefer to see elected.

Yours truly,
H. LeBRUN.

Dec. 27th, 1898.

TO THE ELECTORS
—OF THE—
TOWN OF PETERBOROUGH.

Having been honored with the nomination for Alderman, I respectfully beg leave to solicit your votes and influence.

My views regarding the ownership of all public franchises are well known. I am strongly in favour of all municipal works, such as Light and Power Supplies, Water Works, Telephones, etc., being under the control of the town, and I will support any such measure having this object in view.

If you do me the honor of electing me, I pledge myself to use my best judgment in encouraging manufactures and everything else that will aid the growth and prosperity of the town. I will also be found supporting careful economy in civic expenditures, consistent with the efficient management of our town affairs.

Being a live-long advocate of the interests of the working man, I can confidently solicit their support, and pledge myself to stand up for their rights on every occasion.

As it will be impossible for me to personally wait upon all the electors before polling day, I take this opportunity of soliciting your support.

Yours truly,

HUMAN SACRIFICES

On the Altar of Diabetes, Saved by Dodd's Kidney Pills, Only.

Hardly a family in the country is free from Diabetes. Great thirst, failing sight, numbness in the thighs, bleeding gums, swollen ankles, emaciation, nervou ness, pale or turbid urine, loss of sexual power, decaying teeth, pains in the loins or small of the back, are all positive signs that Diabetes is in the system.

Do you know how it ends? In DEATH. A premature, horrible, agonised, pitiful death. The victim has no peace, no ease in life. His days are filled with tortures. His nights are waking dreams of agony. He longs to die, yet fears the terrors of his end. He dies, a bloated, fetid, repulsive mass of corruption. That is the only end of unchecked Diabetes. Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure it. They drive it out of the system thoroughly, create new, clean blood, rebuild the diseased kidneys, and restore robust health.

AMERICA'S RAPHAEL.

A Picture Which, It Is Said, Has Yet to Be Discovered.

There is one picture in America which, for convenience's sake, may be designated "Fata Morgana." It is frequently alluded to and always in a tone of reverent admiration. When one is in New York one hears of it as in Boston. When one is in Boston one hears of it as either in New York or Philadelphia. If the quest be pursued in these cities the picture is said to be located in Baltimore and so forth. What is this mysterious work which would appear to be considered as the chief treasure of art in America? It is a wholly imaginary Raphael. I found the most rooted conviction in all so called "art circles" that America is the happy possessor not only of a Raphael, but of a superbly fine example of that master, and, as already indicated, the picture is not only alluded to with pride, but with an admiration that is akin to awe.

It is unfortunate that the picture does not exist, except in the fervent transatlantic imagination. In a word, there is no Raphael in America. Strangely enough, there are very few forgeries even, the one or two canvases with any approach to the manner of the great Italian master being so obviously imitative that no one with any adequate knowledge of his work could possibly be deceived. It is, however, a pleasant fiction, and enables patriotic Americans in Europe to enlarge upon the superb masterpieces overseas.—Nineteenth Century.

Woe to That Dressmaker!

You may talk about naval heroes and rough riders all you like, but for superhuman nerve and colossal daring commend me to a woman I saw in a dry goods shop here in town only last Monday morning. I had an excellent opportunity to observe her carefully, for she stood precisely where I desired to stand while she—well, this is what she did: She asked the salesman to show her a certain piece of red cashmere. Then she produced from her pocket the cut paper pattern of a child's dress and calmly pinned the pieces to the cloth.

The salesman stood politely by, thinking, if a salesman ever had time to think, that she desired to ascertain the quantity required for the garment she intended to make, but she didn't intend to make any garment at all. After she had pinned the whole pattern carefully in place, she took it off and rolled it up. There was a gleam of triumph in her eye.

"Thank you," she said. "That's all I wanted. I know it didn't take four yards. That dressmaker has just kept that extra yard and a half, that's what she's done."

But my, my! Think of a dressmaker reckless enough to try to deceive a woman like that!—

OTIS AND DEWEY IN CONCERT.

American Military and Naval Commanders Working Together.

Washington, Dec. 27.—The Administration has taken steps to safeguard American interests at Iloilo, in the Island of Panay, one of the Philippine archipelago, and a military and naval expedition is now on its way there from Manila.

Cable advices were received here today from Gen. Otis, commanding the military forces in the Philippines, and Admiral Dewey, commanding the naval forces there, showing that they are acting in concert in the matter.

Gen. Otis reported that he had dispatched two regiments and a battery of artillery to Iloilo on army transports, and Admiral Dewey notified the Naval Department that the cruiser Baltimore had sailed from Manila for the same place. It is explained that these officers are acting upon their own discretion in the matter and that no official advices have been received here to indicate that there is any unusual lawlessness at Iloilo. Several days ago it was reported by way of Madrid that the Spanish forces in Iloilo had been attacked by the insurgents and had driven them back with heavy loss, but this report lacks official confirmation. The U. S. expedition is more in the nature of a precaution, but will take active measures for the suppression of lawlessness in case the condition of affairs requires it.

HAVANA TROUBLES.

They Are Incident Upon the Inauguration of the New Order.

Havana, Dec. 27.—Francisco Quintera, a Spanish guerilla, while walking along Gonios street yesterday, was fired at from the roof of a house and seriously wounded. During the last 24 hours one man has been killed and 12 have been wounded in affrays in different parts of the city, and 11 burglaries have been committed. The city is in a state of unrest. A party of colored Cubans in the morning entered a wholesale grocery establishment, owned by the Spanish firm of Mestro & Mata, and ordered Senor Mestro to kiss the Cuban flag and to cry "Viva Cuba Libre." He refused to obey, whereupon one of the Cubans cut his head badly with a machete.

Hamilton Man Attempts Suicide.

Hamilton, Dec. 27.—Without friends and money, and fearing to face Christmas in such destitute circumstances, Edward Hardy, over 50 years of age, tried to end his life Saturday afternoon in Hooper's cheap lodging house at 129 York street. Hardy went into one of the bedrooms and slashed his throat with a razor. He was found not long after by a boarder, lying on a bed, with blood streaming from the wound. The doctors think Hardy will recover, although the wound is a severe one.

Richard Nichol Arrested.

Hamilton, Dec. 27.—Yesterday Richard Nichol, a young man, was arrested on a charge of receiving stolen property. Nichol was wearing one of the eight overcoats stolen from Morris Harris, tailor, about two months ago. Shortly afterwards Detectives Reid and Campbell recovered some stolen coats in a house on Hess street, but they did not catch the thief. The prisoner says he has no knowledge of the crime.

AN ENDLESS CHAIN.

Of Kidney Diseases Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Ingersoll, Dec. 12—The newspapers throughout the Dominion published, last week, reports of the almost miraculous recovery of Mr. Michael Sherlock, after a prolonged illness with Kidney, Bladder and Urinary troubles. Mr. Sherlock's recovery was due solely to his use of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

This week another case is reported. Mr. G. J. Cook, a farmer living in West Oxford township, states that Dodd's Kidney Pills cured him of Kidney Disease and Lame Back, after he had suffered for over a year.

Thus it goes. The report of each cure by Dodd's Kidney Pills, brings another to light. Dodd's Kidney Pills have formed an immense endless chain of cures all round the Dominion. They have not failed once.

Ottawa, Dec. 27.—Messrs. Christie, Greene & Greene, acting for the Bank of Ottawa, have issued a writ against the Ontario Central Railway Company, claiming $306,379.75. The plaintiffs claim that this is the amount due from the defendants upon certain coupons to debenture bonds issued by the Ontario Central Railway Company.

Insane Girl Deported From Buffalo.

Buffalo, N.Y., Dec. 28.—Lizzie Donovan, the insane girl who came to Buffalo from Guelph, Ont., and was ordered deported, was taken back to Canada by an inspector of the poor department. She was accompanied by a woman attendant from the Erie County jail. When the party reached Guelph the authorities there at first objected to receiving the girl, but when the inspector explained the situation, they accepted her without further demur.

ORCHARD AND GARDEN.

An apple or cherry tree is much more valuable if it shoots out low.

In setting out roots at any time, never allow the roots to become dry.

Nectarines or apricots will thrive anywhere that the peach or plum will.

With plenty of wood ashes as a top dressing no manure is needed for young trees.

One of the best remedies for the rose slug is a strong stream of water from a small hose.

Always plant thrifty trees and always select young trees in preference to those that are overgrown.

Blight in many cases attacks without warning. The only safe remedy is to cut off and burn every branch or limb affected. The quicker this is done the better.

While trees may be set out as long as the ground is not frozen, care must be taken that the soil is filled in closely around the roots, as they will be injured by freezing.

It is a good plan before the ground freezes to see that good drainage is provided in the orchard. Allowing water to stand around the roots is very injurious, especially to young trees.—Exchange.

WAVES OF WATER.

The basin of the St. Lawrence river covers 530,000 square miles, of which 460,000 are in Canada.

Lake Morat, in Switzerland, has the curious property of turning red every ten years, owing to the presence of certain aquatic plants which are not known in any other lake in the world.

The first use of Niagara's power was made in 1735, a primitive sawmill being operated. Nothing more was done until 1842, when Augustus Porter conceived the plan of hydraulic canals, and in 1861 one of them was completed.

Recent investigations have shown that the principal source of the gulf stream is not the Florida channel, but the region between and beside the islands of the West Indies. At Bimini the volume of this warm water is 60 times as great as the combined volume of all the rivers in the world at their mouths.

POPULAR SCIENCE.

The average pulse of a healthy man should beat 72 times a minute.

Nearly all skin diseases are supposed to be caused by microscopic insects.

Some of the petrified wood found in Arizona, it is said, is so hard that steel tools will not work it, the petrifications being only three degrees less in hardness than the diamond.

Bad weather may be predicted from the sudden rise and fall of wells. Curiously enough, however, small and rapid changes of barometer are more certain to affect wells than large changes.

A German biologist has calculated that the human brain contains 200,000,000 nerve cells, 5,000,000 of which die and are succeeded by new ones every day. At this rate, assuming the correctness of the German's guess, we get an entirely new brain every 60 days.

KLONDIKE NUGGETS.

The Klondike has been a bonanza only for those who sought for gold in the pockets of their fellows rather than in the frozen ground.

The young man who has come back from the far north and describes the Klondike as "one vast, measureless hell of frost, ice and snow" evidently has an imagination which would make him a most successful advertising agent for a circus. —Chicago Times-Herald.

Caught.

A clergyman recently, addressing those who criticise others while they themselves are open to criticism, told this story: "When I was a boy, we had a schoolmaster who had odd ways of catching idle boys. Says he one day: 'Boys, I must have closer attention to books. The first one of you that sees another boy idle I want you to inform me and I will attend to the case.' 'Ah,' thought I to myself, 'there's Joe Simmons, that I don't like. I'll watch him, and if I see him look off his book I'll tell on him.'

"It was not long before I saw Joe look off his book, and immediately I informed the master. 'Indeed,' said he. 'How did you know he was idle?' 'I saw him,' was the reply. 'You did. And were your eyes on your book when you saw him?' I was caught, but I didn't watch for the boys again."—New York Tribune.

Permanent Cure of Chronic Headache.

It's hard to struggle along with a head that aches and pains all the time.

In nine cases out of ten persistent headaches are due to poisoned blood.

And the blood has been rendered impure in most instances through derangement of the liver, stomach and bowels.

The reason Burdock Blood Bitters makes permanent cures in all cases of headache is because it starts the organs of elimination acting freely. The poisons and impurities are carried off from the system.

Purified blood circulates in the brain cells and instead of pains and aches there is renewed mental and bodily vigor.

And the cure is permanent, such a cure as every chronic headache sufferer desires.

For proof we give you the statement of Mrs. F. D. Duffy of Lime Bank, Ont.

"For six months I suffered from severe headache, and not finding anything to cure me, resolved to try B.B.B., which I had heard highly recommended. I found it a perfect cure, and really believe it to be the best remedy for headache in existence. I only used two bottles and the cure has been perfect and permanent. I feel now like a new woman."

"IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY."

To Wm. McCabe, Esq., Managing Director, North American Life Assurance Co., Toronto:

DEAR SIR.—Your official notice came duly to hand, apprising me of the results obtainable upon my 15 year endowment Policy in your Company for $1,000 which matured on the 5th inst. Of the various options you have given me viz.:

Cash value	$1,564 96
Paid-up Policy, payable at my death, for	2,560 00
Yearly Income for life of	166 20

I have decided upon the cash value; and it gives me pleasure to testify that, as I anticipated it would be when I took out the policy, IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY. This returns me the full premiums of the 15 years and over 4½ per cent. compound interest in addition to which you have carried the risk upon my life. In view of the lowe ing rates of interest which have been obtainable during the latter portion of the period, it is difficult to see how this excellent result could have been surpassed.

Yours sincerely,

Test the KIDNEYS

They are the Great Feeders of our Bodies

The Purity of the Blood is Dependent on their Cleansing Powers

There's a time to all, old and young, man or woman, when poor health brings trouble, anxiety, and burdens hard to stand up under, and one's efforts to rid himself or herself seem only to be baffled at every turn, and we are prone to grow discouraged.

That is not the time to give up—but the time for action, the time to seek out the seat of the trouble, and not as your best judgment and the experience of others will help you, guarding against mistakes in the treatment adopted for your particular ailment.

MR. GEORGE BENNER,
WIARTON, ONTARIO, says:—

As a life saver to mankind, I hereby state what Dr. A. W. Chase's K.-L. Pills did for me. For nearly four years I was greatly troubled with Constipation and general weakness in the Kidneys, and in my perilous position was strongly advised to use Chase's Pills, and to-day I can safely and truthfully state that they have saved my life.

CHAPTER XVI.

A STRANGE BRIDAL BANQUET.

Neil Bathurst bounded up the stairs which led to his rooms in the big commercial building, three steps at a time. It was the evening of Clarence Arteveldt's wedding, and the detective, who had been "pipping" all day had barely time to prepare for the ceremony. Plunging through the great hall, he ran upon a half-grown lad, who was pounding lustily at his own door.

"Hello, youngster," he cried. "Don't batter my door down. What's the row?"

"Oh! it's you, be it?" ejaculated the gamin, taking a close survey of him by the light from various transoms. "I thought you never would wake up."

"Well, it's me or not, according to who you take me for," replied Neil, at the same time putting a key in the door.

"I takes you fer the chap as belongs to this 'ere room—ain't your name Bathurst?"

"That's me, sonny," pushing the door open.

"Well, then, this if fer you," presenting a crumpled note, and turning to go.

"Who sent you?"

"Dunno;" from the hall without. "Good-by, cap'n." And Neil heard him clattering down the stairs.

Having closed his door, Neil opened the envelope hurriedly. It contained a half sheet of paper, covered with scrawled hierglyphics, quite incomprehensible to any, save him for whom it was intended. Neil understood it at a glance. It was a letter in cipher, the key of which was held by himself and Robert Jocelyn. Translated, the cipher read thus:—

Old Pard:

Be at Mike's to-night from seven until further notice. I am up to some "queer-shoving" games, and can't work alone. See you later.

Neil uttered a low whistle. "Rob in town again," he muttered. "Where will he turn up next? At Mike's at seven. Why, that's the wedding hour. By Jove, fate is against my seeing the fair bride. Arteveldt will feel hurt, I suppose, at my non-appearance, but business is business. I can't desert Rob, even for a wedding." And he began a queer sort of toilet, one not at all in keeping for a wedding guest.

"What an odd fish Rob is," he mused, as he prepared himself. "Turning up in all sorts of places, and after all manner of game. Who supposed him in the city now. But then—as I had not heard of him for a week, I might have expected it."

Not long after, a flashily-dressed young man came cautiously out from Neil Bathurst's room, hurried down the lesser stairway, and turned his face toward the famous gambling house, familiarly known as "Mike's." For a second time, Rob Jocelyn, by putting in a sudden appearance, had prevented a meeting between his friend Neil, and the fair Lenore. The fair Lenore! How fair she was, on this, her bridal eve.

There was to be a brilliant ceremony at a stately church, and, later, a reception; not at the residence of Mrs. Arteveldt, the elder, but at the new home of the bride and groom. This was the wish—the whim. Mrs. Arteveldt called it—of Lenore. And Lenore's wishes were equivalent to commands. She was not to be argued out of this "whim." She would have no reception at the house of her mother-in-law; she would receive her own wedding guests—Mrs. Arteveldt mere among the rest.

Clarence had not ventured an objection to this arrangement; in truth he saw none. "What if it is a trifle unusual," he had said to his mother, "we must receive in our own house, and why not on our bridal night? I am not afraid for Lenore. She may be ignorant in some respects regarding society, but she lacks nothing that a lady should know. I tell you what, her mother must have been not only a lady, but a most extraordinary woman. Lenore never mentions her, but it is plain she has had no common training. What our city belles must acquire by education is second nature to Lenore. I believe that Mrs. Armyn was a travelled woman, an educated woman, and that she has been in the society of the best."

Finding all opposition useless, Mrs. Arteveldt had set about the task of making others think that this new departure was entirely to her liking; and she had done one thing more. Feeling convinced that her prospective daughter-in-law would not prove flexible in her hands, and relieved of the fear that had hitherto haunted her, and prevented her supplying herself with a pleasant youthful companion, she had asked Kate Seaton to come to her in that capacity. She had been pleased and attracted by Kate's pretty face and bright, cheery ways. The girl had a sweet soprano voice, and was also an excellent reader. Mrs. Arteveldt felt that, having once extended her stately patronage to Lenore, it would not answer to let any barriers spring up between them. Lenore was fond of Kate, and it would put them upon a pleasanter footing to have the girl in the house. Then, too, it would render Mrs. Arteveldt a trifle more independent. A young lady patronized by her must become popular, and Kate, when she had acquired a little more dignity, would become an ornament to society; she would soon acquire this needful dignity under the Arteveldt influence.

Kate had accepted the lady's offer gladly; the Ruthvens were far from being rich, and she had more than once tried to persuade her sister to let her go and seek a situation as bookkeeper or clerk in one of the many stores where young ladies were employed, but Mr Ruthven would not consent to this. Mrs. Arteveldt's offer was something quite different. Here was an opportunity for Kate to better herself. The argument that was most to the liking of Kate's sister was contained in a speech made by Mrs. Arteveldt, when settling the matter of wages, or, as she termed it, "compensation."

"You see, Mrs. Ruthven," she had said, "the money I offer her is not much. I named so small a sum because I wish to reserve the privilege of furnishing her wardrobe myself. She will, of course, go out with me, as well as see much of society in my own house. I want her to dress in accordance with the society in which she will be thrown."

The arrangement had been completed before Lenore was made aware of the change in store for Kate, and she had not displayed as much enthusiasm as Kate had hoped for, and expected. But then, Lenore was engrossed with her own affairs.

After all, Jess Warren did not feel elated over the success of her plot. She had not anticipated anything like the present state of affairs. She had not dreamed that Clarence Arteveldt's haughty mother would, under any circumstances, consent to receive Lenore. She had not expected that Lenore would accept the situation with such apparent composure, and afterwards carry things with such a high hand. Since the affair at Gentleman Jeff's Lenore had treated Jess with marked politeness in the presence of others, and had utterly ignored her existence if for a brief moment the two found themselves alone.

"Our turn will come," Jess had said at last, to her confederate. "When she is married and holds the purse strings, we can unloose them; she won't want facts to leak out when she has begun to taste the sweets of society. And if she won't 'come down' the old lady will. Besides, we shall have the advantage of appearing in their drawing-rooms. They won't dare slight us." They were destined to appear once, at least, for they were among the first to receive beautifully engraved cards of invitation; first, to attend the ceremony of marriage, and after to attend at the reception.

There was one other odd feature at that wedding. Lenore would have no bridesmaids.

Alone they stood at the altar, two splendid specimens of physical beauty. Lenore Armyn was the fairest of all fair brides; stately as a duchess, and cold as the north star. Clarence Arteveldt had never looked handsomer, his cheeks burned with excitement, his eyes flashed triumphantly. More than one fair belle envied Lenore Armyn that evening; more than one of his male friends declared Arteveldt "a lucky dog."

Two fully expected guests were absent from the ceremony, Neil Bathurst and Aura Durand.

It was a brilliant assembly, that which gathered under the roof of Clarence Arteveldt's fine new house; not too large, just the cream of the Arteveldt set. The bride's friends being represented by Mrs. and Mr. Ruthven, Kate Seaton and—Heaven save us!—Jess Warren and Carrie VanBuren.

Reader, let us mingle with the groups of bright-robed ladies, and clerical-looking men, who are gathered in those elegant rooms. Lenore Arteveldt, surrounded by a group of admiring new acquaintances, stands at the upper end of the large drawing-room, her words are few, and her face somewhat graver than a bride's face should be, but she bears herself with perfect grace, and is a good listener.

"Mrs. Arteveldt seems one of your handsome, silent sort," says a gentleman to Jess Warren, who is arrayed in a wonderful garment of rose colour—bought with the price of Lenore's wrong.

"Yes," replies the widow. "Dear Lenore is always silent—of late." The last two words sotto voce.

At almost the same moment Mrs. and Mr. Durand are turning away, after having proffered late congratulations to the bride and groom. But Miss Annin lingers near Lenore and Clarence.

"Aura was so disappointed at finding herself unable to come," she says, looking up at Clarence Arteveldt.

"I am sorry that she is sick," replies he. "Hope it's not serious."

"Serious! dear me, no!" laughing prettily. "Didn't you understand her father? Aura is not sick. She has sprained her ankle."

"Oh! a sprain! How did that happen, and when?"

"Last evening. Miss Durand was returning from the theatre. She slipped in getting from the carriage. They had to carry her in."

Others move nearer, and Miss Annin turns away. As she passes Lenore, the latter puts out her hand.

"I have not the honour of Miss Durand's acquaintance," she says, looking Miss Annin straight in the eye; "nevertheless tell her that I trust she will find that her injury can be amended—in time."

Miss Annin bows, and then moves away, wearing a queer look upon her face.

"Ah, Miss Aura," she thinks, "there is a peculiar meaning in those words, or I am not good at guessing."

"Miss Durand is not here," said a lady to Clarence, "how is this, Mr. Arteveldt?"

"Miss Durand has sprained her ankle," replied the bridegroom. "I am sorry not to see her here; that makes two disappointments for me to-night. My friend, Bathurst, is absent, too. You remember him Lenore, turning toward her and speaking in a lower voice—"The detective."

Carrie VanBuren has approached, and, unnoticed by either, stands close at the bride's elbow. She hears the low-spoken words, and she sees Lenore Arteveldt start suddenly. At once her thoughts fly back to the sunny afternoon when the young man had been pointed out to Lenore, while crossing Dearborn street. Without making her proximity known she silently turns away and seeks out Jess Warren.

"Clarence," says the bride, a moment later, leaning toward him, and speaking in a low tone, "will you arrange that Mr. Fordham shall escort Jess Warren and Miss VanBuren to the supper-room? I want them to sit next to us."

"But, Lenore——"

"Don't argue, please. You are in your own house. You have only to speak to Mr. Fordham; and I insist upon it."

"Then, of course, it shall be so. But I thought you would prefer Kate——"

"I don't prefer Kate; she is best off with your mother. Go now and find Mr. Fordham."

Obediently, yet reluctantly, he leaves her side to do her bidding.

The guests are merry; the bride is fair; the groom triumphant. The moments speed by on golden wings.

At last comes the summons to the bridal feast. The table is laden with delicate and costly viands; rare exotics charm the senses and perfume the air; fruits of every clime are heaped about, a profusion of gorgeous colour. There is the glitter of rare and costly plate; the sparkle of clearest crystal; wines glowing with golden and ruby fire are flowing freely as water. The guests are very merry—they are feasting, jesting, laughing, quaffing the glowing wine. From the lower end of the table a gentleman rises, wineglass in hand. It is Mr. Hale, the lawyer and friendly adviser of the elder Mrs. Arteveldt.

"Ladies and gentlemen, a toast," he says. "Let us fill our glasses to the health, long life, and future happiness of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Arteveldt."

There is a rustling, a murmur of approbation, and the gurgling of wine flowing into many glasses—then—a sudden hush—and startled eyes are turned toward the upper end of the table. The bride has risen to her feet; her head is thrown back defiantly; her face is as colourless as the whitest ivory. In one hand she holds a wineglass, full to the brim—the other she extends in a commanding gesture.

"Before you drink that toast, hear me," she says, in full, firm tones. "Hear how Clarence Arteveldt won his wife. Before you drink to him, know of what he is capable—know that I, who stand before you to-night with a heart filled with loathing for the man whose wife I am—was entrapped into this marriage. All unfamiliar with the city and its wickedness, I was led by that man," pointing to the bridegroom, "and these, his confederates," signifying Mr. Fordham and the now guilty-looking women on either side of him, "into a gambler's den. Then I was told that the one way to save myself was by becoming the wife of the wretch who had thus entrapped me. Otherwise my friends should know that I had been a gambler's guest, and my honour would thus be blackened. Unknown to myself, I stood that day where no good woman ever stood before. But there behold two women who lured me into that place, with their own eyes open. Two women, who were not there for the first time, nor for the second. On them let the shame fall! Thus far their scheme has been successful. Clarence Arteveldt will hardly slander the woman who bears his name, and has been the chosen friend of his mother. He has won me for his wife—but his wife in name only. His roof can never shelter me! I would die sooner than receive aught from his hand. He won me by fraud—but he can hold me by neither fraud nor force! Before God, I swear that never shall his hand touch mine! Never will I hear his lips call me wife! Never shall his eyes look upon me after this hour! Clarence Arteveldt, this evening has seen your triumph—this night, and all the future, shall witness mine. When to-morrow comes let then your friends and guests say whether or no your wife has avenged herself."

CHRISTMAS CHURCH CHIMES.

ST. PETER'S CATHEDRAL.

Rev. Dr. Teefy, of St. Michael's College, Toronto, delivered a greatly appreciated Christmas sermon, at Pontifical Vespers, Sunday evening in St. Peter's cathedral. The other services during the day were as follows:—Solemn high mass at 5.30 a. m., followed by low mass; 8 00 a. m., low mass; 9 15, children's mass; 10,30, Solemn Pontifical mass.

The service was Lambilott's mass and the choir acquitted themselves very creditably. A solo "O Holy Night" was sung by Mrs. George Ball, and the "Adeste Fidelis" was rendered by the full choir, Misses Mary and Katie Dunn taking the solos. The "Deus in Adjutorium" and "Dixit Dominus" were sung by the full choir, solos being taken by Miss Mary Dunn and Mr. Jas Wyer. A solo "Laudate Puerl" (Zingarelli) by Mrs. Geo. Ball, was sung in faultless style. Lambilott's "Magnificat" was well sung as was also the "O Salutaris," the solo in the latter being taken by Miss Lilie Hurley and Mr. Jas. Wyer. "Tantum Ergo" (Rossi) was sung by the full choir. Messrs. Hodgson, violinist, and Wesley, cornetist, assisted with the music.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH.

The services at St. Paul's church were bright and interesting. Appropriate sermons were preached by the pastor, Rev. Dr. Torrance, the hymns and psalms also being appropriate to the occasion and were heartily sung by the congregation. The anthems given were fully up to the usual standard of excellence achieved by this choir. In the morning, Stainer's "While Shepherd's Watched," was sung, embodied in which was a bass solo by Mr. J. Dawson and a soprano solo by Miss Mary Paterson. In the evening—Best's "Peace on Earth," was finely rendered, Mrs. Mein doing remarkably good work in the solo. During the evening a quartette composed of Messrs. Mein, McKeown, Shelton and Dawson sang "Glory to God in the Highest." Mr. Crane presided at the organ and gave "The Hallelujah Chorus," as a recessional at the morning service.

GEORGE STREET CHURCH.

In the morning anthem—"Praise unto the Father"—the solos were taken by Miss Clara Belleghem. The sacred solo "Nazareth" was nicely rendered during the offertory by Mr. Frank Turner.

At the evening service a splendid programme of Christmas song was rendered. The opening chorus, entitled "Royal Diadem," was given with fine effect. The anthem "We have Seen His Star" was also magnificently given. The solo "Holy Night" was sung in fine voice by Mr. Mulligan. A sacred duet—"Prayer of the Wanderer," Excell,—was very sweetly sung by Miss Clara Belleghem and Mr. Walden. The chorus "Chiming Bells" was rendered by the gentlemen.

ALL SAINTS'.

All Saints' church was very prettily decorated for the Christmas services. The arches of the windows were encircled with wreaths of evergreens. The electric light fixtures were almost hidden in green and long garlands of evergreenes were also stretched from the ceiling. The full choral service was very effective. In the morning the anthem "Let us now go even unto Bethlehem" was sung. The evening anthem was entitled "Behold, I bring thee good tidings." A new arrangement of the Te Deum was fully appreciated by the congregation. Miss Mills took the soprane solos, whilst those for the base were taken by the basses of the choir in concert. A very fine rendering of the processional hymn, "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," was also given. The music will be repeated next Sunday.

CHARLOTTE STREET CHURCH.

The Charlotte street choir introduced a very pleasing feature in Sunday's services by opening each service with appropriate Christmas carols. The morning anthem was "Calm on the Listening Ear of Night," the solo being well taken by Miss F. Hall. In the anthem "Ye Nations all be Joyful," the solo parts were sung by Miss Martha Stephens and Mr. C. Parker, the duet being taken by Misses Hall and Stephens in good voice. The offertory anthem, "Come and Worship," was taken by the entire choir.

The opening carol in the evening service was "Worship Christ the New Born King," Mr. A. L. Davis taking the obligato solo. By request of the pastor the morning anthem was repeated, and during the offertory Marston's beautiful Christmas hymn, "Calm on the Listening Ear of Night," was again given by the entire choir, the solos being taken by Mrs. Pearce.

ST. JOHN'S.

All three Christmas services in St. John's were very largely attended and were bright and cheerful. The church was decorated with unusual effectiveness, the chancel decorations being particularly marked by good taste and seasonableness. The music during the day was special. In the morning the offertory anthem Loyd's Te Deum was sung with great spirit, and in the evening the exacting anthem was Hayden's "The Heavens are Telling."

ST. ANDREWS.

The Christmas Day services at St. Andrew's was special, particularly the music. Miss Falconer took the solo in the morning anthem, "For unto us a child is born" very effectively, and Mrs. T. W. Martin sang with excellent taste the solo, "Nazareth." Mr. Jas. Brown and Mr. John Peace very creditably rendered the solos in the evening anthem, and Miss Falconer sang the solo "Star of Bethlehem" in a very finished manner.

PATRIOTIC SCHOOL CONCERT.

An Excellent Entertainment by the Pupils of S. S. No: 9, Smith.

In spite of the unfavourable weather, the large temperance hall at Selwyn was well filled last Thursday night on the occasion of the first concert of S. S. No. 9, Smith. The hall was very prettily decorated with mottoes and flags. A large picture of the Queen and a Dominion ensign occupied a prominent position in front. Among the mottoes were "God bless our Queen," "Canada, our Home," and "Welcome to All."

The scholars were uniformed and presented a very pretty appearance on the platform in the choruses and drills. The girls wore white dresses with white or blue sashes, and the boys white shirts with belts.

Promptly at 7.45, the time advertised, Mr. Wellington Manning took the chair, and under his able direction the following programme was rendered:

WARSAW.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Compliments of the season! Mr. H. A. Moore elected by acclamation.

Excitement is running high over the county council election and the "glad hand" is seen everywhere.

The graveyard here will not do as big a business in the future as in the past. Everyone has had their lives renovated by a gentleman who struck here last week. He was a small sized man with long rubber boots and a heavy mustache. He did quite a medicine business while here, but has removed to a larger field.

Mr. John Wasson, we are pleased to learn, has almost entirely recovered from his recent illness.

Miss Effie Hughes, of Peterborough, is spending her Christmas holidays at her father's.

Mr. Ernie Wasson, of Peterborough, was in town on Monday last.

Mr. A. P. Choate, of Toronto, was down for a couple of days this week.

Extensive preparations are being made here for the manufacture of honey for next season.

THE GROWTH OF THE DAIRIES.

Interesting Statistics Gathered by the Government of Ontario—The East far in the Lead in Number of Factories.

The Province of Ontario has been and may justly be described as a land of dairying. This is very well shown by a report just now published by the Ontario Government giving lists of the cheese and butter factories in the Province. There are altogether 1,123 cheese factories and 234 butter factories, 1,357 in all.

It may be noticed that the East is much more given to dairying, for of the 1,357 factories about 75 per cent. are situated east of Toronto. The counties which lead are Hastings, with 96 factories; Frontenac, 72; Leeds, 65; Prescott, 63; Dundas, 55; Carlton, 53; Glengarry, 48; Oxford, 45; Russell, 44; Lanark, 43; Stormont, 43; Northumberland, 43; Grenville, 40; Middlesex, 39.

Ten years ago there were not ten per cent. of the present number of factories in existence.

TO THE ELECTORS
—OF THE—
TOWN OF PETERBOROUGH.

At the request of numerous ratepayers of the Town, I have consented to become a candidate for Alderman for 1899.

I therefore take this opportunity of soliciting your support, and if elected I will use my best judgment in regard to all matters that may come before the Council.

Hoping to be favored with your hearty support, I remain,

Your Obedient Servant,

JOHN CORKERY.

Peterborough, Dec. 28th, 1898

TO THE ELECTORS
—OF THE—
TOWN OF PETERBOROUGH.

Having been honored with the nomination for Alderman, I respectfully beg leave to solicit your votes and influence.

My views regarding the ownership of all public franchises are well known. I am strongly in favour of all municipal works, such as Light and Power Supplies, Water Works, Telephones, etc., being under the control of the town, and I will support any such measure having this object in view.

If you do me the honor of electing me, I pledge myself to use my best judgment in encouraging manufactures and everything else that will aid the growth and prosperity of the town. I will also be found supporting careful economy in civic expenditures, consistent with the efficient management of our town affairs.

Being a life-long advocate of the interests of the working man, I can confidently solicit their support, and pledge myself to stand up for their rights on every occasion.

As it will be impossible for me to personally wait upon all the electors before polling day, I take this opportunity of soliciting your support.

Yours truly,

GEO. BALL.

MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS
PETERBOROUGH.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—

As a Candidate for election to the position of Alderman, I respectfully solicit your support.

I can refer you to my record in your Town Council as having zealously looked after the best interests of the town. I hope, while soliciting support from the ratepayers of the town at large, that my services will entitle me to a general support that will ensure my election. I can promise that I will use every endeavour to advance the best interests of the town and to see, as far as in my power lies, that due economy is exercised in all expenditures incurred. Again soliciting your support,

Yours respectfully,

CHAS. B ROBERTSON.

TO THE ELECTORS
—OF THE—
TOWN OF PETERBOROUGH

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—I find on further consideration that I don't want to be an Alderman this year. I therefore withdraw from the contest.

My thanks are due and are hereby tendered to the gentlemen who nominated me; also to all those who have offered to vote and work for my election.

Yours very respectfully,

J. L. HUGHES.

TO THE RATEPAYERS
OF PETERBOROUGH.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—I am in nomination as one of your Aldermen for the year 1899, and solicit your votes and influence to secure my return.

I hope to be extended a hearty support. The future of our town depends upon judicious action by your Town Council. If elected, I engage to give my best attention to your municipal affairs and to work intelligently and faithfully to secure the best possible results.

Respectfully yours,

R. S. DAVIDSON.

Having been urged by many of the ratepayers of the town to become a candidate for Alderman, I have accepted the nomination.

I therefore beg leave to ask for your support, and, if elected, pledge myself to safeguard the interests of the town to the best of my ability.

Being a large property holder in the town, my interest in the honest management of municipal affairs should be a sufficient guarantee that I will always favour the most careful economy—at the same time exercising my best judgment in promoting the growth, progress and prosperity of the town.

Yours respectfully,

NOAH T. LePLANTE.

THE ANTI-ANARCHISTS

Combine in Europe to Put Down Holders of the Chaotic Faith.

AN INTERNATIONAL POLICE.

A Bureau With Nine Members to Be Established—Berlin Will Be Headquarters With Representatives From Germany, Austria, France, England, Italy, Russia, Switzerland and Belgium.

Rome, Dec. 29.—The New York World correspondent has secured from a delegate the result of the anti-Anarchist conference recently held here, whose proceedings had previously been kept secret.

First—An international bureau of police for the surveillance of Anarchists is to be established at Berlin, consisting of nine members—German, Austrian, French, English, Italian, Russian, Swiss, Belgian and Dutch. This bureau will correspond directly with all the police of Europe, and will be represented in each country by special agents. All the states represented will contribute equally to the maintenance of the bureau.

Second—The European Governments are to negotiate for extradition treaties governing Anarchists. Anarchists are defined as all those who make a public profession of the Anarchist faith, who are found in possession of Anarchist publications, bombs and letters of an Anarchistic character, and all members of Anarchist societies. A person convicted of an Anarchist crime will be punished according to the law of the country where the crime was committed.

Anarchists' journals are to be placed under censure, their circulation interdicted, the editors, printers and distributors proceeded against as Anarchists. All proceedings against Anarchists are to be conducted in secret. These decisions were accepted by the delegates from Germany, Austria, Russia, Italy, Turkey, Spain, Portugal, Sweden, Denmark, Montenegro, Servia and Roumania, but England, France, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, Luxemburg and Greece rejected them. It is probable that the ultimate result of the conference will be the establishment of an international police bureau.

SALISBURY'S PROPOSAL.

The British Premier Lays Down the Conditions of a Joint African Commission With France.

London, Dec. 29.—The Anglo-French disputes over territorial possessions in Africa have been opened up for diplomatic settlement. Lord Salisbury formally proposed yesterday to the new French ambassador at London, M. Paul Cambon, that a joint commission be appointed for the delimitation of the frontiers.

Lord Salisbury, however, in his note virtually lays down the frontier lines, conceding to France certain territory to the south and west of a line drawn westward from the Ubangni watershed, but firmly claiming for Egypt and England a sphere of influence over the Bahr-el-Ghazel, Darfur, Borgu and all the territories to the east shore of Lake Tchad.

These diplomatic negotiations are the result of Major Marchand's evacuation of Fashoda. At the time the French force occupied that point on the Nile, Lord Salisbury firmly notified the French Government that no negotiations could be considered for the settlement of the long-standing African territorial disputes until the French withdrew completely from the Nile. News of Major Marchand's withdrawal from Fashoda and retreat back into the interior of Africa having been received last week, the British Government now turns to diplomacy for peaceful settlement of the matter.

How France will regard England's declaration that the Bahr-el-Ghazel region and the shore of Lake Tchad are beyond the sphere of negotiations, is doubtful, as it is those very regions east of the Nile that the French have been most desirous of securing. If France declines to accept the conditions laid down for diplomatic negotiations the whole matter may again revert to the critical stage it reached at the time of Marchand's occupation of Fashoda.

BLOODY TIMES IN HAVANA.

Spanish Policeman Shouted for Spain When Menaced by Cubans.

Havana, Dec. 29.—Yesterday afternoon a Spaniard named Fernandez, a member of the municipal police, was surrounded by a crowd of Cubans in Bomba street. Cuban and American flags were waved in his face. His rifle was twisted out of his hands, and half a hundred men yelled to him: "Shout Cuba Libre or Die!" Fernandez threw up his arms as if to assent, and then, when the mob had quieted down to hear what he had to say, he cried out in clear tones "Viva Espana! Viva Espana!" Three knives were thrust into him, and last night he was dying.

It is a favorite sport among the Cubans to stop in the streets persons supposed to be pro-Spanish and to make them kiss the Cuban flag and cry "Viva Cuba Libre!" Sometimes these instances have their humorous features, but quite as often the victims are viciously treated. Yesterday a fight was started by some Cubans carrying American and Cuban flags, who declared that they had been insulted by Spanish marines. A Cuban drew a pistol, and, declaring that he would defend the American flag, fired. Other shots followed. According to unofficial reports a Spanish soldier was killed, a Spanish marine fatally wounded and at least one other, if not several, hurt.

Menelik Is Aggressive.

Cairo, Dec. 29.—The Abyssinian flag is reported to have been hoisted at Galabat in the Soudan about 200 miles north of Khartoum. This is the latest from Menelik, the Abyssinian King, who has for over a month been appearing in various places with a large force suggestive of designs on Soudanese territory. A collision with the English or Egyptian forces may follow his aggressiveness.

Sagasta Out of Danger.

Madrid, Dec. 29.—Senor Sagasta, who has been suffering from bronchial pneumonia, was much better yesterday, and is now considered out of danger.

Senor Emil Castelar, the Republican orator and statesman, who has been confined to his room for some time with a serious pulmonary catarrh, is improving.

The Pacific Cable.

London, Dec. 29.—It was learned yesterday that a commission will be appointed in February to arrange the details for carrying out the project of a Pacific cable as outlined by Sir Sandford Fleming of Canada.

Australian Gold Shipments.

Melbourne, Victoria, Dec. 29.—The gold shipments from Australia for the year 1898 have amounted to $60,100,000. The shipments to America increased $10,000,000.

Not a Cent Was Lost.

New York, Dec. 29.—A fire broke out in the Pacific Bank building here yesterday. The vault doors were closed before the paying teller could handle $60,000, lying around him. He called to his fellow clerks to help him carry out the money. They all filled their pockets and rushed into another building. After the excitement the cash was counted and not a cent was missing. The money was in all sizes and kinds, even to coppers.

Too Weak for Manslaughter.

Newmarket, Ont., Dec. 29.—The adjourned enquiry into the case of Robert Abner Reid, who was recently severely censured by the coroner's jury for neglect to his son, who died under suspicious circumstances, was resumed here yesterday before Magistrates Robertson and Jackson, the charge being manslaughter. The Crown was represented in the person of H. W. Maw. H. S. Knowles, barrister, Newmarket, appeared for the defence. The case lasted all day. The evidence was of a conflicting character and was rather too weak to support a charge of manslaughter. The magistrates adjourned the case for a day in order to arrive at a decision.

Kelly Wants His Children.

Buffalo, Dec. 29.—William J. Kelly, a clerk employed by the New York Central Railroad, asked Justice Hooker yesterday afternoon to order Miss Bridget Parker, a school teacher, and her sister Mary, to produce in court this morning his two children, Arthur and Harry, aged 16 and 10 respectively. The women promised to produce the children. Mr. Kelly claims that the Parker women, who are aunts of the children, kidnapped them and took them to Dunnville, Ont. Arthur has been missing since April 27, and Harry since May 1.

Slept for Two Weeks.

Caribou, Me., Dec. 29.—Sadie Wright, the 13-year-old girl at Perham who fell asleep while studying in the schoolroom two weeks ago and has slept ever since, awoke yesterday. She was very weak and spoke but a few words.

NOT THE AMERICANS

But the Filipino Insurgents Have Captured Iloilo.

TROUBLE IS FORESHADOWED.

General Otis at Manila Tells of the Spanish Evacuation and the Occupation of the Insurgents. Issue May Be Raised at Once as to the Possession of the Islands.

Washington, Dec. 29. — Just before noon yesterday a despatch came from Gen. Otis at Manila that at once confirmed the fears of the officials of the War Department as to what had taken place at Iloilo. It appears that the American forces arrived too late on the scene, and that the insurgents added to the difficulty of the problems already presented by hoisting their flag over the city, which they had been besieging for months.

The evacuation by the Spaniards of all the Philippine ports, as reported by Gen. Otis, although doubtless inspired by a desire to secure their safety by concentration, undoubtedly has done much to complicate the problem already presented to the War Department of extending the military jurisdiction of the United States over the islands. It will now be necessary to expedite the execution of the original plans and it may be fully expected that within a week important events will have happened in the Philippines. It is presumed that Gen. Otis will demand the surrender of Iloilo into his hands and this demand may at once raise the issue between the insurgents and the United States Government of possession of the islands. The province has a population of 479,000, and it is the second seaport of importance in the Philippine group. It is located on a river navigable for vessels of 15 feet draught, so that very few of the American gunboats would be available.

In his cablegram to the State Department Gen. Otis stated that the Spanish forces had evacuated all stations in the southern islands, except Zamboanga and Mindanao, by order from Madrid. The Spaniards have chosen a strong place for the concentration of their troops in the Town of Zamboanga, which, as the reports here indicate, is strongly fortified and possessed of considerable natural strength from a defensive point of view.

SAM PARSLOW'S FATE.

He Is to Be Hanged on the 10th of March Along With Cordelia Viau—Recommendation to Mercy.

St. Scholastique, Que., Dec. 29.—The trial of Samuel Parslow for the murder of Isidore Poirier, at St. Canute, was finished yesterday at 5 o'clock. Parslow was found guilty, and sentenced to be hanged on March 10 next.

The jury afterwards signed a recommendation for mercy.

It was after 2 o'clock when the court resumed its work. Judge Taschereau continued his address, which was against the prisoner. There was a great crowd in the court room. Every available seat was occupied and standing room could not be obtained by many who wished to witness the last scenes in the famous trial. It was after 4 o'clock when Judge Taschereau brought his address to a close.

The jury then retired. They were out only about a quarter of an hour, when, one by one, they resumed their seats. After the roll was called the clerk of the court asked them if they had determined upon a verdict. The answer from the foreman was in the affirmative.

"Guilty or not guilty?" was the next question.

"Guilty!" was the response.

The silence in the room was deathlike as Mr. Ethier, counsel for the prisoner, stood up and spoke briefly. He objected to some of the evidence which had been given during the trial. The confessions given to Detective McCaskill were particularly alluded to. Mr. Ethier also found fault with his honor's charge to the jury.

Mr. McKay, counsel for the Crown, replied.

Judge Taschereau spoke briefly. He had settled the questions of law as they had come up during the trial; the other matters should have been discussed before the verdict was given.

Mr. McKay asked that sentence should be passed on the prisoner at the bar.

Parslow, standing up, prayed for the clemency of the court.

The judge proceeded solemnly to pass the sentence of death upon the prisoner. His honor referred to the respectable family to which Parslow belonged. He had been led astray by Cordelia Viau, and had been influenced by her to take Isidore Poirier's life. Concluding, he said: "Samuel Parslow, you will return to the prison whence you came. There you will remain in confinement until March 10 next, when within these prison walls you will be hanged by the neck until you are dead, and may God have mercy on your soul."

Cordelia Viau will suffer upon the same day.

The jury signed a petition in Parslow's favor immediately afterward. The verdict gives considerable satisfaction here, although a good deal of sympathy was expressed for Parslow. There was absolutely none when Cordelia Viau was sentenced.

Requirements for Dawson.

Victoria, B.C., Dec. 29.—Latest arrivals from Skaguay and Dyea say that the Canadian Government is about to post notices, as was done last year, at the entrance to the Klondike thoroughfares, providing that all men who intend to go into that country must have either 200 pounds of assorted provisions and $500 in cash or 600 pounds of provisions and $200 in money, over all expenses, from the coast to Dawson.

A Farmer Found Dead.

Sarnia, Dec. 28.—The village of Courtright was thrown into a state of excitement when news was received that James McMaster, a well-known farmer of the second line of the Township of Moore, was found dead in a ditch between A. Courtney's and C. A. Bertrand's farms, on the fourth line.

FRIENDS PREVAILED

A Nervous Toronto Woman Walked the Floor During the Night for Hours at a Time—She Makes a Statement.

TORONTO, ONT.—"I was troubled with nervousness. It was impossible for me to keep still and if the spells came over me during the night I had to get up and walk the floor for hours at a time. My blood was very poor and I was subject to bilious attacks. My feet would swell and I was not able to do my own housework. I treated with two of the best physicians here but only received relief for a time. I became discouraged. One day a friend called and advised me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I laughed at the advice but I was prevailed upon and procured one bottle. Before I used it all I began to feel better. I took several bottles and also several boxes of Hood's Pills. Now I can eat and drink heartily and sleep soundly. Hood's Sarsaparilla has entirely cured me and also strengthened me so that I now do all my own work. I cheerfully recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all sufferers from nervousness, weakness or general debility." MRS. H. F. PARM, Dagmar Street.

CAN A DYSPEPTIC BE A CHRISTIAN?

How "The Doctor" Answered This Puzzling Question.

Whether a Dyspeptic Can or Can Not Be a Christian, No Person Need Be a Dyspeptic—Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets to the Rescue.

Can a Dyspeptic be a Christian?

This was the question our friend the lawyer asked the doctor, during a conversation in a street car a few days ago.

The doctor's answer was characteristic. Said he: "In these enlightened days, there are very few dyspeptics who do not break the chains of their slavery.

"Since Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets were introduced to the public, the number of dyspeptics in Canada has rapidly decreased.

"If it is a Christian virtue to help ourselves, and that it is, everyone now admits, then those dyspeptics who use Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets thereby do a Christian act."

"Tell me, doctor," said the lawyer, "do you honestly believe that Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets will really cure Dyspepsia?"

"I not only honestly believe, but I positively know it, from my own experience," answered the medical man. "I have used Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets myself. In fact I take one or two of them immediately after every meal I eat. And I can truthfully assert that my digestion is perfect in every way.

"Then I use them in my practice daily, and I have never known them to fail on any occasion—never once.

"I am not the man to prescribe, nor endorse any medicine, unless I know it to be thoroughly worthy. Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets are worthy in every way. They are not a 'patent medicine.' They are genuine and reliable—the only medicine I know of that will cure all stomach troubles."

"That decides me," said the lawyer. "I'm going to try them. Where can I get them?"

"All druggists sell them at fifty cents a box, six boxes $2.50, or they are sent, on receipt of price, by The Dodd's Medicine Co., Limited, Toronto."

Kingston is no less famous as the scene of many of the most wonderful and startling cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills, than for the first named reason.

Now another is added to this long list of cures. Mr. Robert Orr, Pine street, reports that after suffering for years with Bladder trouble, Dodd's Kidney Pills completely cured him, though all other remedies had failed. Every city has a similar experience. Dodd's Kidney Pills have cured every time.

CHICAGO'S CORRUPTION.

Grand Jury Has Taken the City Council in Hand and Will Investigate Everything.

Chicago, Dec. 29.—Allegations of bribery in city affairs are under investigation by the grand jury, and the entire City Council has been asked to appear before that body. The inquiry was begun yesterday and will be continued to-day and Friday. The investigation will not be confined especially to charges made in connection with the 50-year street car franchise ordinance. Alleged bribery in other matters of public importance will receive attention. Shortly before noon yesterday the clerk of the grand jury was instructed to send out subpoenas for nine aldermen and two ex-aldermen. All of these except one appeared during the afternoon. All who appeared were heard. Enough evidence was brought out to determine the grand jury to proceed along the line adopted, and the clerk was instructed to send out summonses for every member of the City Council to appear to-day.

No Right to Ugliness.

The woman who is lovely in face, form and temper will always have friends, but one who would be attractive must keep her health. If she is weak, sickly and all run down, she will be nervous and irritable. If she has constipation or kidney trouble, her impure blood will cause pimples, blotches, skin eruptions and a wretched complexion. Electric Bitters is the best medicine in the world to regulate stomach, liver and kidneys and to purify the blood. It gives strong nerves, bright eyes, smooth, velvety skin, rich complexion. It makes a good looking, charming woman of a run-down invalid. Only 50 cents at any Drug Store.

A NEW INVENTION

The Newcombe Piano Has It.

It consists of a Patented Practice CLAVIER or STOP which diminishes the tone when required and saves wear on the Piano; it also does away with the old way of having to press down the pedal with the foot in order to soften the tone when running the scales or practicing. Oftentimes the young pupil on the piano cannot press down on the pedal without throwing themselves out of the proper position when they should sit erect. This invention in the NEWCOMBE PIANO will enable children to begin two years earlier on the piano. In addition to the above, the NEWCOMBE PIANO is the finest made in Canada. Children often complain about practicing; they like it if they have a NEWCOMBE PIANO. 1898 styles are gems of art, containing every late improvement; they possess that beautiful full sweet tone which delights the singer, and so pleases every musical ear. Organs of every description at Wholesale Prices.

Big Bargains now on hand in slightly used, Upright and Square Pianos of the various makes taken in part exchange for the famous NEWCOMBE PIANOS. IMPERIALISM IN THE STATES.

William J. Bryan Says the Philippines Might Be Held in Trust.

Omaha, Neb., Dec. 29.—William J. Bryan arrived at Omaha yesterday. When asked if he thought the question of imperialism would overshadow the money issue in the campaign of 1900, Mr. Bryan said it was difficult at this time to say what relation these subjects would bear to each other then. He thought if Congress would adopt a resolution pledging this government to keep the Philippines only as a trust for their people, as we do Cuba, until a stable government is established, the expansion issue would be at an end. If, however, the question is not settled in some such way as this, he said it would continue to be a matter of discussion until it was disposed of, and therefore would remain one of the issues before the people.

Pingree Is Pessimistic.

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 29.—In introducing Rev. S. R. Fuller of Boston at Light Guard Armory last night to listen to an anti-imperialism address, Governor Pingree said that every soldier America sent to Manila should carry his coffin on his shoulder, as that would be one of the most necessary adjuncts to his outfit.

KING TRIED TO BREAK JAIL.

The Prisoner Held for Extradition at Paisley Attempts to Escape.

Walkerton, Ont., Dec. 29.—Robert King, alias H. W. White, the alleged forger on a large scale and supposed to be a member of a celebrated gang of Chicago crooks, who was arrested in Paisley last Friday, upon information furnished by the Pinkerton National Detective Association, made a futile attempt at jail breaking here yesterday. The turnkey had occasion to visit the prisoner a little earlier than the usual time yesterday evening, and much to his surprise discovered that the prisoner, King, had removed the bars of his cell and the only thing between him and liberty was a common door lock that would have been easily forced. The timely arrival of the turnkey is all that interfered with the prisoner escaping. Extradition proceedings take place on Saturday before Judge Barrett, and the importance of the case is shown by the fact that witnesses are coming from Chicago, Rock Rapids, Iowa, and Washington, D.C.

Two Girl Lepers.

Columbus, Dec. 29.—Ohio will establish a "Molokai" in the hills of Perry County for the care of two lepers. The father, an old soldier, contracted the disease in the south during the war and died several years ago of another malady. The mother goes with them.

An additional dividend of 2½ mills will be paid to creditors of the defunct Central Bank.

ATTACKS ON MR. TARTE

Sir Wilfrid Laurier Says Liberals Should Ignore Them.

THEY ARE EMPTY CHARGES.

A Trusty Friend, Mr. Tarte's Change of Allegiance Is No Reproach—His Letter Deals With Interesting Family Politics of the Liberals—Read at the Reform Club in Montreal.

Montreal, Dec. 29.—An interesting letter from Sir Wilfrid Laurier upon Liberal family politics was read at a meeting of the Reform Club last night. The Club National is arranging for a big demonstration at the Monument National next Tuesday, in honor of the new members elected at the recent bye-elections, and has sent invitations to the members of the Dominion and Quebec Governments, Hon. A. S. Hardy and other leading Liberals. Sir Wilfrid is unable to accept the invitation, but in his letter of regret touches upon a question which has aroused some interest, but in regard to which a great deal of misapprehension has existed. Hon. J. Israel Tarte, Minister of Public Works, has been bitterly attacked for some time past by little groups, more vociferous than significant, and these attacks have, of course, been made the most of by Conservative papers, in the hope of deceiving the public as to the real sentiments of the bulk of the Liberal party. The Reform Club met partly to make arrangements for this demonstration in the Monument National, and during the meeting the Premier's letter was read.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Letter.

The following letter from Sir Wilfrid Laurier to Senator Dandurand was read, dated Dec. 26: "My Dear Senator,—I regret very much that it will be altogether impossible for me to accept your invitation to be present at the meeting of the Club National on Tuesday; important duties detain me here and prevent my leaving the capital even for a day. You tell me that my presence would be desirable at Tuesday's meeting in order to silence once and for all certain enemies who assume the name of Liberals, and who venture, under cover of my name, to attack one of the most highly-esteemed of my colleagues. Would it not really be giving these attacks an importance greater than they deserve to meet them otherwise than with silence? Is it not the height of absurdity to seek to give them the cover of my name? If I had not had confidence in Mr. Tarte, why should I have taken him into the Government? The very character of the attacks which are directed so persistently against him discloses their utter emptiness. The Tories who attack him, openly reproach him with acts for which I accept the responsibility; this is not the place to discuss them. The Tories in disguise who, in the Liberal clubs, wage against him a dishonorable war have found nothing more grievous upon which to base their attacks than that he has not always belonged to the Liberal party; that he is, in their language, a convert (rallie). The fact is indisputable. I see in it no ground of reproach. Mr. Tarte is in good company. Mr. Gladstone was a convert when he was led gradually by the inflexible force of his judgment and his spirit no longer to hold the Tory creeds in which he had been trained. The Liberal party was only too happy not merely to open to him its ranks, but to place him at its head. I could cite any number of such examples; I only recall the most illustrious. However, I shall mention another, for it is well known in Montreal. The Liberals of my generation have not forgotten that they never had in their ranks a partisan more active, more valiant, more devoted, than Alfred Perry, and yet he was an old Bureaucrat of 1837. When the honesty and the courage which were the basis of his nature made it clear to him that he had entered on the wrong path, when he took sides with those whom he had opposed so vigorously, was there a single Liberal from Mr. Dorion, the leader of the party, down to the humblest partisan, to reproach him with having, sword in hand, even stood against the men whose memories are most revered? No. The Liberal party has never been and will never be a party of exclusion and ostracism. Above all, it is a party of progress; open to all intelligences, to all generous sentiments, to all noble aspirations; may it be closed only to base jealousy, odious envy and narrow selfishness. I pray the members of the Club National not to give further attention to the petty quarrels, by means of which it is sought to divert them from the prosecution of the patriotic work which they have had in hand for the last 25 years. Let them return to serious matters, to the discussion of the problems and the questions which concern our country's future, and let them continue their confidence in a man who does nothing by halves, who, when an opponent, fought me with all the ardor of his nature, who, when a friend by my side in Opposition, supported me with perhaps more ardor still, and who, when a colleague in the Government, has given me the most enthusiastic and most effective support. Accept, my dear Senator, the assurance of my most sincere consideration. (Signed) Wilfrid Laurier."

THE BIG OPERA HOUSE MEETING.

The Mayor and Old Councillors Report on their Record.

MR. YELLAND ADDRESSES THE MEETING

Eloquence went Glibly on "Rollers"—Reforms Advocated by Aspirants—Municipal Ownership of Town Franchises Advocated.

There was a crowded gathering of the ratepayers at the Opera House last night on the occasion of the mass meeting, called by Mayor Davis, to permit candidates for the mayoralty and the aldermanic chairs in the coming council to give an account of their past record, to set forth their claims to election and to put their views on civic questions before the people.

The event justified the mayor's foresight. The attendance was large, and without elaborately analyzing the results it may be briefly stated that many important matters were brought out and made plain, and the candidates placed themselves on record in regard to their attitude to important public questions in a manner which they could not do through the medium of the formal cards to electors printed in the newspapers. Those of the ratepayers who were present at the meeting will now have a better understanding of public questions, and will be in a position to make an intelligent choice of mayor and alderman, with an understanding of the merits of the respective candidates, that would have been impossible without such a meeting and its attendant discussion.

Mr. Richard Hall took the chair, and said this was a very important meeting, and one that should be held every year so that councillors could give an account of their actions, and that candidates could explain their positions.

The chairman then invited those who were candidates to take their seats on the platform, and as the several aspirants took their places they were more or less heartily cheered by their supporters in the audience.

Mayor Davis Speaks.

Mayor Davis, who was the first speaker, was heartily received on rising to speak. He referred to his election last year by the large majority of 557, and he had seriously appreciated the responsibility this mark of confidence imposed. He had endeavoured to do his duty faithfully and had been honest in every vote he had cast. Mr. Davis pointed out that he and the council had started the year with economy as their key-note—the mark had been set at 17 mills on the dollar of taxation. When the several committees were struck they made out the estimates with this in view—they proved too high, and they had to be cut down again till they met the 17 mills condition. Many people had wanted things that could not be given with the money available. Electric lights and hydrants were wanted on the outskirts, but as these involved a continual yearly expenditure, we had to go slowly. It was a serious matter to establish a permanent large expenditure. The next question was how to reduce expenditures that were not fixed, like hydrants and lights. The papers had taken up the matter of street improvement and had pointed out how much money had been spent without good results. The matter had to be looked into. There were 80 miles of sidewalk in the town, and there were 30 or 40 miles of walk that should be rebuilt.

A MILE OF SIDEWALK

costs $1,000, and the life of a walk has ten years. If we built 3 miles per year, that would cost $8,000, besides $3,000 per year for repairs. The cost of the walks alone would have meant an increase of two mills on the dollar. The council felt that it was wiser to use the credit of the town and put down granolithic walks (cheers), and these walks were just as good as any he had seen in Montreal or Toronto, (cheers.) The walks would not cost more than $3.00 a year for maintenance. It was a surprise to many, but it was done by borrowing money at 3½ per cent. As to the walks in residential streets, these cost $3,000 a year for repairs, with the cost of lawsuits for bad walks added. A 4 ft. granolithic walk could be built for $1,000 a mile, with interest and sinking fund costing 73 cents a mile, while with board walks we were paying 75 cents a mile or $3,000 a year. The question of sidewalks was solved and we could go on building permanent walks without increasing the rate. Next came the question of roads. Thousands had been spent on our roads and they were in such shape that because $5,000 or $6,000 were not spent on them last year they went to pieces because they had no proper foundation. The council had little to spend last year, and the council had to throw themselves on the indulgence of the ratepayers till better

PLANS COULD BE PERFECTED.

Last year $1,500 was spent in breaking stone by hand, and when it came to putting this on the streets there was no money to do it. If this had been broken with a crusher the cost would have been $350, which would have left $1,150 to put it upon the streets with. This difference disposed of the cry that we were robbing the workingman by using machinery to break stone. The saving effected could all be spent in employing labour to distribute street metal. If the council granted $10,000 to be spent on streets, all that meant work to men to operate machinery and spread broken stone. The problem was whether we could build good streets and keep down the rates. It was proposed next year to build five-mile blocks of macadam street properly by means of floating $5,000 for ten years. Then there would be nothing to prevent us having permanently good streets, as good as any town or city in the country, and at no appreciable increase of cost. In the matter of sewer contracts the mayor referred to the thousands of dollars of expense that had been caused in repairing streets cut up to put in sewer and water services. To obviate this, he explained, as he did at the nomination, that by getting tenders for connections at $13 each, with the cost put in the debenture account, a great saving was effected in comparison with the former way of paying $20 cash. Under the new way the ratepayers only paid 67½ cents per year for 20 years, when all

PAYMENTS CEASED FOREVER.

It was shown that the saving on 150 connections was $5,898 to the ratepayers concerned. In answer to the charge that the council had tried to cut down the wages of the labouring man, the Mayor said $1 25 per day had been paid on corporation work, and they had tried, but had not the power, to embody the same rate in contracts. He pointed out the large sums that had been paid on streets the past year, on pavements and sewer work, and it was proposed to pay out more on permanent work next year. The policy of the council had been to consider the interests of the poor man as well as the rich man. The labouring man must be provided with employment, even if the taxes were raised, and the speaker said that if he had to pay two mills more on the dollar, and an increase of $75 or $100 in taxes to give employment to labour, he would gladly do it. The speaker then adverted to the prosperity of the town, especially in regard to manufacturing industries. The Auburn Mills had been running night and day as well as the Electric Works, The William Hamilton Company could hardly keep pace with their orders. Ackerman's Harness Factory and Matthews' Factory had to greatly enlarge their buildings, the Lock Company had difficulty in supplying the increase of orders and the canoe companies had never had a busier year. When a wave of prosperity was sweeping over Canada it was a great pleasure to know that Peterborough was able to be carried onward on that wave. As to the

they were negotiating with a factory to settle here that would spend $90 000 a year in wages. If proper help were extended by the town we could bring an American concern here that would require buildings 200x40 feet in area and there was a great possibility of having the bridge works re-opened. On Saturday he had closed negotiations for the removal of a piano factory to Peterborough in the spring. The conditions were such as the council could grant. If the people thought that he (Mayor Davis) had done right and fairly well the past year, he felt he was entitled to a renewal of their confidence.

Referring to the steam roller matter the mayor explained that it was never intended to buy a roller for use this year. The three thousand dollars for its purchase was simply put into the bridges bylaw to save expense. Tenders were invited, and the council was besieged by agents. The feeling of the council was in favour of the Russel roller as against the Pitts. The matter came up again and there were three unsatisfactory reports against the Russel roller. Two of these reports had proved to be unfounded, and one was yet to be explained away. His (the Mayor's) judgment was that the Russel was not a satisfactory roller to buy and as we did not need the roller at once, we should investigate the charges. He could not do other than vote against the Russel roller. (Cheers.) Though he had to differ with many of the council Mr. Davis said that he must bear testimony to the fair manner in which the council as a body had treated him. He had said to a councillor in reference to the Russel roller that Mr. Cox had said that the council was perfectly safe in buying a roller made by the Massey-Harris Company. But I said there were three bad reports as to this roller, and I insisted that these reports must be got out of the way. Two of them were shown to be false and one remained yet. On the first of December the council met and called for new tenders for the 14th. On the 15th we received tenders as follows: Harrisburg roller at $3 800, an English roller at $3,300, Russel $3,250, and Pitts $3,350. There was a difference of $400 between the highest and the lowest, and he (Mr. Davis) thought the lowest tender should carry. The Russel agent was present and reduced his tender to $3,000. He (Mr. Davis) did not think that was a very fair way to deal with a tender. (Cheers.) Eight of the council voted for the Russell roller. When it came to sign the bylaw he (Mr. Davis) held that we had no official authority from the Massey Harris Company, to complete a contract. He wanted legal advice, and on the advice of the Town Solicitor he had signed the bylaw. He had done what he had thought right in the matter, though it would have been more pleasant to have been able to act with the majority. (Cheers.)

After a few closing words of appeal Mr. Davis took his seat with warm applause.

Mr. Yelland's Remarks.

Ex-Mayor Yelland was heartily received by his friends when he came forward to speak. He began by explaing that he was present as a candidate not by his own seeking. A large number of the electors had been pressing him for a long time to take the mayoralty—they were not satisfied with the present mayor. He didn't seek the nomination. He would not say anything hard against Mayor Davis. He wanted the people to judge both on their merits.

A voice—"We'll do that all right."

He had a little property on which he paid about $500 taxes, and that was a reason he had taken an interest in public affairs. As to the mayor's pretensions to economy, Mr. Yelland said that was no credit to him particularly, for every public man would be in favour of economy. As to the granolithic pavement on George street, Mr. Yelland criticised Mr. Davis action in getting the cost put upon the tenants, in the interests of a company in which he was interested, instead of putting it against the property, as should have been done. He did not understand how Mr. Davis was effecting the savings he had claimed to have made, because the shot had to be paid yet. He also adverted to the charge that had been made that the sewer Mr. Davis had referred to was designed to drain his (the mayor's) own property. Mr. Yelland condemned the bad streets, which, bad as they were now, would be far worse in the spring. The council had no money to put 300 or 400 cords of broken stone on the streets, but they had money to buy a stone crusher.

WAS THAT ECONOMY?

Mr. Davis had boasted of the prosperity of manufacturers, but he (Mr. Yelland) didn't see what Mr. Davis had to do with that. "Why," said Mr. Yelland, "We were told at the last election that the Auburn Woollen Mills and all these factories would be wiped out of existence and that the Government was going to ruin everything. (Cheers.) Mr. Yelland then went on to condemn severely the practice of the council to going bodily on deputations and spending money that might be spent on the streets and distributed among the workingmen. As to the granolithic pavements, he might have done as well as Mr. Davis if he had not paid for them. He had left the payment to the future and he asserted that the future did not concern Mr. Davis. In conclusion Mr. Yelland said that he had been in town for 48 years and they all know him and his relations to the town. If he had consulted his feelings he would not have been a candidate this year, but he had been urged to enter the field and had yielded. If the ratepayers thought he was the man to do as well as or better than Mr. Davis, they should support him. Since they had brought him out they should do the best they could for him. If the people thought Mr. Davis the best man they should vote for him. Referring to his present candidature it was, in the language of the auctioneer, Mr. Yelland said, "the third and last time of asking." Mr. Yelland, who had not gone exhaustively into matters nor dealt much in details, received a good hearing and his terse and forcible way of putting things provoked frequent applause.

Aldermanic Candidates.

Mr. Henry Best gave an account of his stewardship in connection with the sewers, stating that the system had now cost the town about $70,000 and that 7½ miles had been constructed. He also explained that town property was also indirectly benefitted by the sewer through its being an excellent medium of surface drainage. He advocated the appointment of a Sanitary Inspector to overlook the system, especially sewer connections with private property. The debenture debt, the speaker pointed out, was approaching $300 000, and before more money was expended on permanent improvements through debentures, he advised that the question of assuming the control of the waterworks and electric lighting be considered. A citizens' committee should be selected to confer with the council on these important questions. The matter of cheaper rates, he thought, could only be met by urging on the Trent Valley Canal, which would offer a competitive route for freight, and cause a reduction in rates.

THE ROLLER QUESTION

was also touched on by Mr. Best, who advised the purchase of one which had the advantage of being before the public for the greatest length of time.

Mr. T. H. G. Denne congratulated the town on being on the best financial standing of any centre of the same population in Canada. He had his statement of debentures reduced to writing and as it contained some interesting figures concerning our finances, the following extracts are given:

At the end of the year 1892, six years ago—the debenture debt of the town was $293,550. Since then we have raised by debentures, $11,500 for enlarging the schools, and debentures have also been sold to pay for the construction of the Edison sewer and the Park street drain, $9 352. $10 000 for the Smith street bridge and other special work; $21 000 for the outfall sewer and $19 111.26 for other sewers. The amount covered the sewer construction up to and including contract No. 4—that is Mr. Bogue's contract, which included

THE MAYORALTY CONTEST IS QUICKLY CONCLUDED.

MR. YELLAND RETIRES FROM THE FIELD.

He Issues a Card Announcing his Retirement—He Prefers the Rest His Years Have Earned—Wishes to Avoid Exciting Antagonisms.

In a card in another column Mr. Yelland definitely and decidedly announces his retirement from the mayoralty contest. The reasons urged by Mr. Yelland are satisfactory and do credit to the position he has won as an energetic and highly respected citizen of proven probity and uprightness. After a busy life it is natural that he should resist the promptings of ambition and the solicitations of the many friends who believe in him, and enjoy the leisure that advancing years make welcome. His desire not to embitter his later years with antagonisms that the most calmly conducted contest must engender, is in keeping with his character as a citizen, who has lived in love and charity with his neighbours.

Mr. Yelland's worst enemy, if there is one, will not view his retirement as shrinking from a contest, because it is a contest, or from fear of results. Mr. Yelland has the courage of his convictions, and when he thinks he is in the right the hotter the fight the better he likes it.

We, ourselves, had large expectations, and they were fulfilled above our brightest hopes. We planned on a most unusual sale, but the Holiday Goods that remain tell better than anything else that our planning was none too liberal to justify the unusally liberal demands of the gift-giving season.

We are again ready for another week of big business but

THE MAYORALTY CONTEST.

Alfred Lawrence Davis and William Yelland are the mayoralty candidates, between whom the people will be called upon to choose on Monday next. Both are well known citizens and both enjoy the high esteem of the people of the town.

The claims of Mr. Davis are superior to those of Mr. Yelland. Apart from other considerations relating to the effective service he has given the town the past year, by custom of nearly twenty-five years, Mr. Davis is entitled to a second term without opposition.

This in itself is not sufficient recommendation, but at his nomination last Monday, Mr. Yelland urged it as a ground of grievance he had in connection with the mayoralty. Mr. Yelland, at the end of his first term, was certainly entitled to a second term without opposition and the EXAMINER never urged the claim of any mayor under such circumstances more strongly than it did on Mr. Yelland's behalf in the mayoralty election of '96-7 ; and in no other way perhaps can Mayor Davis' claim to an unopposed return for a second term be better emphasized than by employing the arguments used in support of Mr. Yelland's similar claim in 1896-7.

At the nomination at that time Mr. Yelland himself, as reported, said :

> I have endeavoured to do my duty in the past year, and I believe, as I said before, not without success. It has been a custom in Peterborough to allow a Mayor at least a second year in office without a contest, and I do not know of any reason why the custom should be departed from on this occasion. I therefore appeal to you with confidence for a renewal of your confidence and support.

This language might appropriately have been employed by Mr. Davis last Monday. On December 1st, 1896, the EXAMINER, in Mr. Yelland's interest, had the following in an article supporting his claims, as against a candidate who had broken in upon the rule, permitting a fairly good Mayor a second term unopposed :

> Mr. Yelland is now in the field for mayor and he feels that he has a reason to count upon the liberal support of the electors to place him in the mayor's chair for a second term. Mr. Yelland has occupied the position of Mayor for the past year with credit to himself, and has shown unremitting devotion to his duties. During that time the affairs of the town have been economically managed, and so far as a mayor could be expected to control affairs, it does not seem that any important interest has not received attention. Mr. Moore, who is also an aspirant for the position of mayor, has not submitted any platform that would lead the ratepayers to expect anything in the way of great reforms that would justify a withdrawal of the confidence that has been reposed in Mr. Yelland, and certainly no reasons have yet been advanced why the custom of the past twenty years should be departed from in refusing a second term, where no important reason exists for the adoption of another practice.

With the names of Mr. Davis and Mr. Yelland substituted for those of Mr. Yelland and Mr. Moore respectively, this paragraph exactly refers to the present situation. There is nothing in the course of Mr. Davis during the past year to forfeit the public confidence he so decidedly received last election. On the other hand, he has fulfilled the duties of Mayor in such a manner that apart from the custom of giving a fairly good mayor a second term unopposed, he has very substantial claims to re-election.

Another paragraph in the article mentioned says :

> Mr. Yelland deserves the advantages that the custom of the past twenty years has accorded to a mayor who is elected after a contest. It would have been proper then in view of this custom, to have allowed Mr. Yelland to be returned without opposition, unless some very grave and weighty acts forfeiting the public confidence could be laid to his charge. This cannot be done. His record is a good one ; he has diligently looked after the business of the town, and been most attentive to his duties.

All this applies applies with equal and, in some respects, with added force, to Mr. Davis in the present contest.

Another extract has the same application. On Jan. 2nd, 1897, the following paragraph appeared in the EXAMINER :

> Every mechanic and every man of affairs knows that the first week even the best mechanic is not as useful as he is after he has got into the ways of the shop. On the same principle a mayor is naturally not as useful the first year as he is after he has had an experience of one year, and that is the reason why in the past in Peterborough a mayor has been granted a second term without putting him to the trouble of a contest. Mayor Yelland has got himself into harness and shows that he can do effective work. It is to the interest of the town that a man who has got accustomed to the office and arrived at the period of greater usefulness, should again be returned.

Mr. Davis can very properly appropriate the sentiments and arguments contained in this extract. The people have every reason to be pleased with his record during the past year. He has been public spirited and progressive and has inaugurated what has long been advocated by the EXAMINER as a pressing need of the town, the system of giving a permanent character to our street improvements. He has concerned himself in pushing the best interests of the town, and he has several projects in more or less advanced stage of negotiation that will, if completed, be of great material benefit to the town. If he is again returned he will be in a position to carry out these projects. If not the work in connection will have to be done over again. Without the slightest reflection upon the personal or other qualifications of Mr. Yelland, it would seem that apart from the custom of an unopposed return, Mr. Davis is thoroughly well entitled to a renewed expression of public confidence.

NOTE.—Since the foregoing article was prepared for the press, Mr. Yelland's card in another column announcing his retirement, was received.

THE EXAMINER has to thank the Grand Trunk Railway, through Mr. W. Bunton, up town agent, for a handsome time-schedule—a calendar for 1899. In the upper left hand corner of the card is the tip-tilted totem of the grand old line—"The popular tourist route and international commercial highway"—the words "Grand Trunk Railway System" in gold on a coal black background. The middle of the card is occupied with a fine picture of the new single arch double track steel bridge over the Niagara River, showing the rock-laid walls that confine the green rushing waters with their garniture of snowy foam. The calendar figures are bold and plain and are easier to understand than the intricacies of the ordinary railway folder by the untravelled traveller.

TO THE ELECTORS

OF THE

Town of Peterborough.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN :

Having been nominated as a candidate for the office of Mayor and received promise of a hearty support, I felt it only due the wishes of my supporters to stay in the field and contest the issue to the end.

During the last few days I have been urged by personal friends to withdraw from the contest, and after consideration and in deference to their wishes and as I feel the weight of advancing years I have decided to retire. There is no doubt that my continuing in the field will place me in antagonism with friends within a public and private capacity, and this I sincerely wish to avoid.

I heartily thank all who offered me support and who would, I know, have worked untiringly to secure my return, and beg to subscribe myself,

Yours very respectfully,

WM. YELLAND.

TO THE ELECTORS

OF THE

Town of Peterborough.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN :

Having been honoured with the nomination for Mayor for 1899, I respectfully solicit your votes and influence to elect me to that important and honourable office for a second term.

Besides the recognized practice in the past that the Chief Magistrate of the town should have a renewal of the confidence and support of the electors, I feel that my record during the past year entitles me to a continuance of the trust which you generously reposed in me a year ago.

During the past year I have spent a very large portion of my time and devoted my best energies to the advancement of the town and if again honoured with your support I shall continue to do my utmost to advance the material welfare of Peterborough by supporting as broad and liberal a policy in the management of its affairs as is consistent with the resources of the town and a reasonable rate of taxation, so that she may continue to keep her place among the foremost towns of the Dominion.

Wishing you a happy and prosperous year, I am

Your obedient servant,

A. L. DAVIS.

TWIN TORTURERS!

Lumbago and Rheumatism made Harmless by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Lumbago and Rheumatism cause endless pain and suffering. Every man and woman who runs chances of getting wet, or catching cold, is liable to suffer from one or both. Our hospitals are full of sufferers from these diseases; none are more painful. Every nerve is on fire; every joint is a centre of agony; every muscle an area of torture. To move hand or foot makes the victim shriek with agony.

Rheumatism makes more cripples than all the railroad accidents that ever happened. Twisted, mis-shapen caricatures of humanity, who cannot walk without misery, are to be seen every day. The kidneys are to blame. If they are healthy you needn't fear Rheumatism or Lumbago. Dodd's Kidney Pills keep the kidneys healthy and cure Rheumatism and Lumbago.

A Talking Crow.

The latest curiosity in Bethel, Me., is a talking crow which entertains the boys and girls. The bird was found in the woods over a year ago, when young, having fallen from its nest and broken a wing. It was taken home and cared for, but showed no inclination to talk until a few months ago. It talks as well as parrots, but favors words containing "o," and "Hello, hello, Moses, Ora! Whoa there!" cause the passers-by to turn quickly at times.

HALF DEAD BY THE ROADSIDE.

Ed. Vennie, Late of British Columbia, Slashed His Neck With a Knife.

Montreal, Dec. 28.—A man named Edward Vennie, aged 34, residing at St. Alexis, County of Montcalm, tried to put an end to his life by cutting his throat. He was found half dead on the roadside, and, after a local doctor had dressed the wound, Vennie was brought to the city, and the medical attendants at Notre Dame Hospital say he will recover. Vennie arrived from British Columbia two weeks ago.

Detective Riopele of the city force was nearly killed by a burglar last night in a Rachel street dry goods store. In company with Detective Guerin he shadowed three burglars to the store, and Riopele secreted himself beside the cash drawer. A man named Dupont entered the store in his stocking feet, and discovering Riopele in his hiding place, slashed him about the head several times with a heavy sailor's knife before the detective could defend himself. Dupont was caught by Guerin. Riopele's wounds are dangerous.

IN PETERBOROUGH.

Mr. J. M. Donovan Tells how Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Him.

Peterborough, Dec. 26.—This town is famed throughout the Dominion as the most go-ahead, progressive, wealthy and up-to-date on the continent. This reputation is thoroughly deserved, and was earned by the quickness of the residents to see and to take advantage of a "good thing" when it comes our way.

One especially good thing that our people have benefitted by is the king of kidney cures—Dodd's Kidney Pills—a household remedy in Peterborough.

Among those cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills is Mr. J. M. Donovan, who reports that this remedy cured him completely of Urinary troubles, indicating the first stage of Diabetes.

Dodd's Kidney Pills are the only remedy that has ever been known to cure this disease. They never fail.

Borrowing a Horse.

In his interesting book, "The Lawyers of Maine," Willis relates an anecdote of Judge George Thatcher, who was noted for his humor.

Solicitor Davis and Judge Thatcher, when boys, were neighbors in Barnstable and Yarmouth, Mass. The day after the battle of Bunker Hill the militia of these towns set off for Boston. The boys accompanied the soldiers, Davis acting as fifer. A few miles out from Barnstable an order came directing the military to return home.

In their retreat Thatcher and Davis, tired of their march, mounted an old horse they met on the road, without saddle or bridle. After riding some miles they dismounted and abandoned their steed in the highway.

Many years after Davis, as solicitor general, was prosecuting a horse thief before Judge Thatcher in the county of Kennebec, Me. In the course of the trial the judge leaned over the bench and said in an undertone to the solicitor:

"Davy, this reminds me of the horse you and I stole in Barnstable."

Thunder in Various Regions.

Java is said to be the region of the globe where it thunders oftenest, having thunderstorms 97 days in the year. After it are Sumatra, with 86 days; Hindustan, with 56; Borneo, with 54; the Gold Coast, with 52, and Rio de Janeiro, with 51. In Europe, Italy occupies the first place, with 38 days of thunder, while France and southern Russia have 16 day Great Britain and Switzerland have each 7 days, and Norway has 4. Thunder is rare at Cairo, being heard only 5 days in the year, and extremely rare in northern Turkestan and the polar regions.—London Standard.

Preparing Hubby For the Worst.

A hospital sister summoned the wife of one of her patients into her private room and began to tell the woman gently that the doctors thought very badly of her husband.

"Well, miss, that's jes wot I was to 'im lawst visitin day. 'Tom,' I sez, 'I think you're breakin up,' I sez. 'But we'd miss yer wages of a Saturday,' I sez, 'if so be as it pleased the Lord to take yer.'"—Cornhill Magazine.

A Sure Cure For Consumption.

There is no such thing. Scott's Emulsion comes the nearest to it, but even that will not cure advanced cases, but taken in time it will cure this disease.

Made a New Man.

"I must say Laxa-Liver Pills made a new man of me. I was troubled with indigestion fluttering of the heart and pain in the small of the back, and after taking the Laxa-Liver Pills for about three weeks they cured me." Melville Miller, Beaufort P. O., Ont.

Children Cry for

CASTORIA.

Doctors now agree that consumption is curable.

Three things, if taken together, will cure nearly every case in the first stages; the majority of cases more advanced; and a few of those far advanced.

The first is, fresh air; the second, proper food; the third, Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil with hypophosphites.

To be cured, you must not lose in weight, and, if thin, you must gain. Nothing equals Scott's Emulsion to keep you in good flesh.

Liverpool and United States Wheat Markets Bounded the Price Up—The Latest Quotations.

Tuesday Evening, Dec. 27.

Liverpool wheat futures this morning opened rather strong, and closed unchanged to ¼d per cental above Friday's final figures.

Paris wheat closed 20 centimes lower to 20 centimes higher, with flour 10 to 25 centimes higher for the day. Antwerp advanced 12½ centimes.

American wheat markets were strong and higher to-day. The advance in Liverpool cables, the big decrease for the past week in the visible supply, and the small Russian shipments are spoken of as the bullish features. Chicago futures advanced nearly 2c a bushel, and closed near the top price of the day. This month's delivery gained over 1c.

Visible and Afloat.

As compared with a week ago, the visible supply of wheat in Canada and the United States has decreased 1,776,000 bushels; that of corn has increased 547,000 bushels, and that of oats has decreased 60,000 bushels. To recapitulate, the visible supply of wheat in Canada and the United States, together with that afloat in Europe, is 55,263,000 bushels, against 57,119,000 bushels a week ago, and 69,856,000 bushels a year ago.

BERLIN APPETITES.

Restaurant Men Who Cater to Them Soon Become Rich.

That the restaurant business in Berlin is a paying one, if the location chosen be a good one, the restaurant of the zoological gardens here shows. For a number of years it was leased by a man who understood about as much of the business as the man in the moon. Yet he became wealthy within a few years and retired for good to live on the interest of his money. There were days in summer when he sold 1,000 kegs of beer, besides some 20,000 cups of coffee and 50,000 sandwiches, and as prices are high there he must have made thousands of dollars in a single day.

Fortunately for the public, another caterer now supplies the hungry and thirsty sightseers at the zoological gardens, a man with a good reputation, and he pays twice the rent for the restaurant buildings, too—viz, 100,000 marks per annum, besides spending by the terms of his contract a matter of almost 500,000 marks for improvements. Yet it is probable that he, too, will retire at the end of his term with a fortune.

There are many instances of this kind in Berlin. One of the finest and most highly priced restaurants on Unter den Linden recently sold its good will for a matter of 1,000,000 marks. The owner of a cafe on Friedrichstrasse who started the place but a couple of years ago is reputed already to have cleared about 2,000,000 marks. His head waiter is himself rapidly growing rich from the "trinkgeld" received from the guests and is said to be in receipt of monthly stipends amounting to some $3,000 in American money.—Berlin Letter in Chicago Record.

A BRITISH SOLDIER

Tells how Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills Conquer Disease.

Like the conquering armies of Britain, which are marching to victory in every quarter of the globe, Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are everywhere triumphing over sickness, weakness and suffering, and freeing those who are bound by the shackles of disease.

Mr. David Walsh, of Carleton Place, Ont., a man who has served with distinction and credit in the British army, and is now an employee of the C. P. Railway, says, "While in the army I got broken down, and my nervous system was completely shattered.

"I was much troubled with liver complaint, loss of appetite, etc. My rest became broken and was disturbed by vivid dreams. This had been going on for 14 years, although I took a great many remedies to escape from the troubles which afflicted me.

"However, I got no relief until I started to take Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, which I used together with Laxa-Liver Pills, and now after having used a few boxes, I am better than I have been for years. My nerves are restored to full force and vigor, I eat and sleep well, and my entire system has been toned and strengthened."

"Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are a positive and perfect remedy for Weak, Palpitating Hearts, Nervousness, Sleeplessness, Weakness, Dizzy Spells, Smothering Sensations, St. Vitus Dance, Debility, Female Complaints, etc. Price 50c. a box, or 3 for $1.25, at all druggists. "IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY."

To Wm. McCabe, Esq., Managing Director, North American Life Assurance Co., Toronto:

DEAR SIR.—Your official notice came duly to hand, apprising me of the results obtainable upon my 15 year endowment Policy in your Company for $1,000 which matured on the 5th inst. Of the various options you have given me viz.:

Cash value	$1,564 96
Paid-up Policy, payable at my death, for	2,560 00
Yearly Income for life of	166 20

I have decided upon the cash value; and it gives me pleasure to testify that, as I anticipated it would be when I took out the policy, IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY. This returns me the full premiums of the 15 years and over 4½ per cent. compound interest, in addition to which you have carried the risk upon my life. In view of the lowering rates of interest which have been obtainable during the latter portion of the period, it is difficult to see how this excellent result could have been surpassed.

Yours sincerely,

APPALLING DEATH

From Kidney Disease Prevented by Dodd's Kidney Pills, Only.

"Kidney Disease." Do you know what it means? It means that the kidneys are either rotten, or rotting; the blood is full of poisonous, death dealing corruption; that the Kidneys can't do their work; that the victim is a walking charnel-house; that his hours are numbered; that the victim must take Dodd's Kidney Pills if he does not want to die.

Have you Kidney Disease? Is your skin hot and dry; memory failing; breath short; urine, reddish, or pale colored; does it scald when passing; is your appetite changeable; do your ankles swell; have you bitter taste in the mouth on getting up mornings; is there a brick-dust deposit in your urine?

Any of these signs is proof positive of Kidney Disease. Will you be cured, or will you die? Dodd's Kidney Pills are the only means on earth that will cure you. They never fail.

A Woman's Crime.

A THRILLING STORY OF LOVE AND ADVENTURE.

By LAWRENCE M. LYNCH.

Author of "John Arthur's Ward," "The Diamond Coterie," "Against Odds," Etc., Etc.

The words rushed from her lips like living fire. So sudden, so unexpected are they, that they strike every listener dumb. Clarence Arteveldt sits like a man of stone, but his face tells its own guilt. Not one who looks upon him there doubts that Lenore has spoken the shameful truth. And the faces of Jess and her confederate, and of George Fordham, corroborate her story. Already Lenore is avenged, for these four evil ones stand before their fellow-mortals as targets for derision and scorn. For a moment the stillness is death-like; then the mother of Clarence Arteveldt falls forward in a swoon. This breaks the spell of silence, and stupefaction. They turn toward Lenore, but the place where she stood is vacant. The bride has disappeared. They raise the lifeless form of Mrs. Arteveldt, and remove it from the scene of confusion; they talk in low, horror-stricken tones. Clarence Arteveldt is the last to come out of his trance; blinded, stunned by a rush of strong emotions—fear, rage, baffled passion, despair—he reels like a drunken man. He stands alone, this wretched bridegroom. The friends who a moment since sat at his board, and quaffed his wine, stand aloof now, and favour him with glances of curiosity or aversion; they are all against him tonight, to-morrow,—when it will be too late—they will talk pityingly of him, and try to endow him with the virtues that he had not. All around the board see the full glasses—filled for the toast destined never to be honoured. Clarence Arteveldt starts forward, and drains his glass, refills it, then fills it again. As he drinks, a hand falls on his arm; he turns. It is his mother's lawyer, Mr. Hale.

"What is to be done, Arteveldt?" he asks, in a dry, unfeeling voice, as if he were acting from a sense of duty, not sympathy. "Your mother is in a swoon, shall I act for you?"

"Yes, act, for God's sake."

"Then go to your own room, and leave that wine alone."

The bridegroom turns away with an angry gesture, and fills and drains another glass.

"Stop, man," cries the lawyer, sternly. "Don't you see that you are damaging yourself still more in the eyes of all these people? Come out of that frenzy, and tell where your wife has gone. If you can explain this thing to your own credit, for mercy's sake do so."

Down goes the wineglass, with a crash, it lies at the feet of the deserted bridegroom, shivered to atoms.

"Did you not hear her?" he cries, throwing out his hands, wildly. "Why look for her? Neither you nor I will ever find her. I might have known it, I might have understood her better. I was a blind fool; she has ruined me, body and soul—I have lost her; that is all that I care for! She is gone, gone, GONE!"

The last word ends in a despairing shriek, he reels backward, and falls, striking his head against the carved leg of his own dining-room chair. Then Mr. Hale assumes command of everything. Presently the house is quiet, the guests are gone. A physician has been summoned, and in obedience to his command, Mrs. Arteveldt is removed to her own house, borne to her carriage, accompanied by terrified Kate Seaton.

Clarence Arteveldt is compelled to retire to his own room, yes, compelled,—the darling of the drawing-room, the handsome, the wealthy, the weak-headed, traitor-hearted husband of an hour is half mad. Rage, disappointment, and wine have mastered his reason; for the time, at least, he is a maniac, and requires a keeper.

At last they are all gone, the doctor, the lawyer, every one, and the tired, excited servants are asleep. In the chamber destined for the bride lies Clarence Arteveldt, beside him a weary servant sits nodding. Suddenly the madman starts up.

"See!" he cries, with eyes distended, "she is coming, I knew she would finish her revenge! She wants to kill me now. Drive her away, John; don't let her see me! Here! come here; see, I will lay myself upon her pillow—that may move her pity. Now lower the lights down, down, lower yet, her eyes gleam so. There, now lower the curtains, and lie down close beside me; pull the covers about you. There! Do it, I tell you, and make the room darker yet! Now, that is better; give me some more wine, John."

Obediently the tired servant moves about, doing his bidding. The doctor has said that he must be kept soothed and quiet. He, the servant, presents the weak wine, containing an opiate, and then lays himself down upon the bridal bed. With his own hands the mad bridegroom pulls the satin and lace coverings about the shoulders and ears of the servant, then he settles himself down, saying, "There, I shall sleep, now."

He will sleep now; yes, as we all must sleep—once.

CHAPTER XVII.

A STARTLING ANNOUNCEMENT.

The two detectives had spent the night in the gambling house, as had been appointed by Jocelyn in his cipher note to Neil Bathurst. All night long they had been vigilant, and just before the first hint of dawn was visible, they repaired to the rooms occupied by Bathurst, having first shadowed two of the suspected counterfeiters to their respective lairs. To do this of course they had found it necessary to separate, and when Rob Jocelyn came to the room where they were to snatch a few hours' sleep, he found his friend there before him.

Bathurst had thrown off a portion of his clothing, and was already in a state of semi-unconsciousness.

"Come in ahead, did you, old man?" said cheery Jocelyn; "you looked fagged out, and I feel so. Let's defer explanations of any sort until we have slept a little." They had been unable to hold much intercourse during the night just past; and each was in ignorance concerning the doings of the other, since that night, weeks ago, which they had passed together in the characters of Mr. and Mrs. Robbins. "I must turn out pretty early, however, Neil; and you must do your sleeping accordingly."

With this he flung himself down beside his friend, and soon they were in the land of Nod. Nothwithstanding his intention of rising with the lark, the sun was high when Rob Jocelyn awoke that morning. Muttering something rather profane, he sprang up and awakened his friend.

"Come, old man, this won't do! get up and shake yourself awake; I'm going to smoke the first this, and while I smoke, do you talk. We must cut it short, too, for I can't lose much more of this morning. Here goes, then. First, how's your burglary case?"

"Pretty well—for the burglar," replied Neil, rubbing his eyes. "Deuce take the burglar. I believe he went away in seven-league boots."

"Not given him up, old man?"

"Never a bit. He's getting some rest, however."

"And Bradwardine?"

"Have made memoranda of everything concerning him. Got time to look at them?"

"Not now. Give it to us condensed."

"All right, after all, a small unt-shell will hold the prime facts. As the widow O'Neil I am still in favour with Mr. J. B. I have done a good deal of imaginary looking for the woman who stole those papers—she, by-the-by, is convalescing slowly in the hospital recommended by Dr. Rice, while her would-be assassin languishes in the jug. I have had several conversations with her; she is a woman to be pitied. I shall see that Mr. J. B. does not get his hands on her. Well! I have satisfied myself on a few points. First, that this man, Brady, as he calls himself, is Bradwardine beyond a doubt. Second, that the loss of those papers is a heavy blow to him. Third, that he is an unscrupulous man, and intent upon mischief of some sort. Fourth, that he is playing this game, whatever it is, to win a fortune; and fifth, that he has visited our New York village before you, and has at this present moment a private enquirer searching for the hiding place of the mother and child."

"Thanks," laughing lazily; "I found out that last for myself."

"Did you?" exclaimed Neil.

"Yes; they have both been in Elm Valley before me, Brady and the 'tracker.' Is that the end of your budget?"

"Pretty much."

"Well, you have not done badly; but as he may at any time get news from his private enquirer, one or the other of us must keep an eye upon Brady."

"Of course."

"Well, here goes for 'Mistress Bourne'; the Elm Valleyites declare her a foreigner—we knew that before, however; she was very beautiful and very sad; lived like a nun, at least as secluded, and seemed to have plenty of money—but you know a villager's idea of plenty of money is not at all an extravagant one. Nobody knew where they came from; nobody knew where they went. Opinions in regard to their nationality were as varied as they were absurd. The child was then small, four or five years of age, say and must, therefore, be now a young lady of twenty or thereabouts."

"Did you make use of the picture?"

"No; I thought it best to satisfy myself by enquiries. Making allowance for the time that must have elapsed since the taking of the woman's picture and the settlement of Mistress Bourne in Elm Valley, the description of that lady tallies exactly with the picture. I think the original and the wanderer are the same."

"It looks like it."

Jocelyn gave a terrific yawn, and consulted his watch.

"It's time for me to move," he said. "Where will I see you to-night, Neil?"

"Here. I am quite at leisure to-night."

"All right. Will you look after Brady this afternoon?"

"Yes. I have not much else on hand. By-the-by, Rob, yo unspoiled a wedding for me last night."

"Did I? Sorry! How was it?"

"You remember Arteveldt?"

"The handsome blood that you introduced, my first day in Chicago?"

"The same. He was married last night."

"Good Lord. I pity his wife."

"By-the-by, he married one of those pretty girls he mentioned that day. I was going out with him, you remember, and threw over the engagement."

"I remember."

"Well, Arteveldt met his fate that night, and because of you, old man, I was not present at that meeting. He married her last night, and because of you, again, I have not yet seen the fair bride."

"Upon my word, Neil, I'm sorry."

"Well, you need not be. I was not over anxious about the matter. Arteveldt seems to have conceived a great liking for me, the Lord only knows why. He would have had me under his mother's roof all the time, if he could. I had to be fussed over by his lady mamma, because of the little service I happened to render him once. If you had not turned up, I should have been at the wedding, if only to please Arteveldt. I had a sort of top-sided liking for the fellow, although he was not just of my stripe."

"I should think not."

As Jocelyn said this, he arose to prepare himself for departure.

"And, by the way, Neil, don't look for me very early to-night; I may take another spin after those 'shovers.' If anything keeps me later than, say midnight, will manage to let you know, however."

"All right, Rob; if you really won't stay any longer, I think I will take another nap."

As soon as the door closed behind Jocelyn, the young detective threw himself down with a yawn. "Now for another snooze," he murmured, contentedly.

Scarcely were the words off his lips before there came to his ears the sound of hurried steps outside, and in a moment a hasty knock upon his door.

"Who's there?" called he, rising quickly.

"Mrs. Arteveldt's coachman," replied an agitated voice; "open, sir, for God's sake!"

Hurriedly Bathurst unlocked and opened the door, and the messenger, pale and breathless, fairly reeled into the room.

"Come quick, sir," he gasped, without waiting to recover his breath. "She won't leave off screaming until you do! Come quick!"

"Who won't, Peter?" asked Bathurst, who instantly comprehended that something unusual had occurred. "Who wants me?"

"She, sir!" panted the man. "Missus Arteveldt."

Bathurst seized the man by the arm with a firm grip, and, pushing him toward a chair, said, with some sternness:—

"Sit down and take breath—there,"—as the man obeyed him. "Now then, talk rationally! What has happened?"

"I will, sir; but you must come straight—Missus moans for you every breath—it's awful, sir. They came for us an hour ago. And when she got there and saw it—oh, but she did go mad. 'Send for Neil Bathurst,' she cries, 'he will find who did it!' To think of it at such a time! And the first thing she thinks of is revenge!"

"Revenge! Man, what do you mean?"

"What I say. She will have the life of that beautiful creature. She wants you to find her."

Neil Bathurst sprang toward the man and shook him fiercely. "There, you old fool," he cried, angrily, and without letting go his hold, "stop ranting, and tell me the exact truth, what has happened, and none of your extras."

"Lord, I thought you understood!" howled the man, his teeth rattling like castanets. "This has happened: Mr. Clarence has been murdered on his wedding night, and his wife has run away!"

THE CANDIDATES FOR MUNICIPAL HONOURS.

George and Water streets and some of the other streets. These sums added together make a total of $70,711 for which debentures have been issued and sold since 1892, and yet in spite of this somewhat heavy issue for these important works, the debenture debt is to-day $43,000 less than it was then.

Debentures for the payments on sewer contracts Nos. 5 and 6, Messrs. Kennedy & Wade, and Mr. Begue's present contract, and also for the payment on account of the granolithic sidewalks up to date, could be issued and yet the debenture debt would not be as great as it was in 1892 by over $16,000.

This year $19,111 of debentures for the sewers were issued, but debentures to the amount of $30,000 which fell due were paid, so that the debenture debt than at the beginning of the year.

There is another fact to be considered in connection with the debentures issued this year, and those that will be sold during the coming year for sewers and sidewalks, and that is that the greater part of them will be chargeable to the lands benefitted, from which the interest and sinking fund will be collected by frontage tax, and the rate of taxes for the town will not be affected by those chargeable to the property benefitted. Of the $19,111 issued this year $11,642 is charged directly to frontage tax, and the proportion will be greater in the debentures to be raised for those which were sold this year, including the brick sewers.

While on this subject of debentures he pointed out that the total debenture debt to-day is $250,161. But the Town Trust Commissioners hold available cash assets, including the Midland Railway Company mortgage of $44,000 that would bring the net debt down to about $200,000. Of course in addition to these cash assets the town has valuable assets in real estate, such as town buildings, market square and market buildings, schools, interest in the court house and parks and other property that would amount to much more than the whole debt of the town.

These facts are gratifying. They demonstrate that Peterborough continues in a

such as few, if any, municipalities of this size can boast of.

When striking the estimates this year we had to carefully examine and cut down every item to keep the rate at 17 mills, because the fixed expenditures ran away with the greater part of the taxes. We have the school demands, it demands of the commissioners for interest, and sinking funds for debentures, over which we have no control, and we have existing contracts for lights and hydrants, which have some years to run. Along with these there are items in connection with the administration of justice and other departments that cannot be changed. With these fixed charges to begin with, we had to figure closely, and to count on rigid economy in order to hold the rate at 17 mills, but we were determined not to raise the rate, and did not do so, and we have come to the end of the year on that rate with a clean sheet. We will not hand any balance over to another year to be paid, but will clear 1898 with every expenditure met and provided for. The financial statement presented to the council on Dec. 15th shows this to be the case, for the liabilities are more than counterbalanced by the available assets. In these assets, when considering current account or the transactions of the year, we only take into account cash assets, but in addition to these we have purchased and paid for the stone crusher, and have a large quantity of broken stone on hand.

THE EXPENDITURE ON STREETS

and bridges was this year kept down to a very low figure compared with former years, yet, even out of this comparatively small expenditure, a large amount was for breaking stone, which will be available in the coming summer for making permanent roadways.

The new system for paying taxes has worked very satisfactorily, even in the first year. Many no doubt found it a convenience to pay half their taxes at a time, and the amount outstanding is about $4,000 less than this time last year. We have paid much less in interest to the bank and have the benefit of this saving to the ratepayers, who paid their taxes promptly, while at the same time there will be a net saving in interest for the town.

In the coming year there will no doubt be more petitions for granolithic sidewalks, and probably also for sewers, and the cost of their work will be largely paid for by the frontage tax principle. At the same time it was pointed out that, while the town's financial position is a most favourable one, care must be taken in the issue of new debentures, for it is of the utmost importance that the good financial position should be maintained. After generally referring to other matters, Mr. Denne concluded his address.

Mr. W. H. White stated that he had been somewhat dissatisfied with some of the proceedings of the council during the year. However No. 1 Ward had received its full share of the appropriations. He had objected to the vote being taken during the summer on the change in the manner of the election of councillors. He had thought that the vote of the people should have been asked on the matter in January at the municipal elections, when the opinion of the ratepayers could have been

MORE FULLY ASCERTAINED.

In connection with the purchase of the roller he defended his course in voting for the Russel roller by reason of the fact that the expert taken from town to inspect the rival rollers had pronounced the Russel machine the better by ten per cent. A number of recommendations of the same roller were then read.

Mr. J. B. McWilliams opened by commending the action of the mayor in calling a public meeting to discuss municipal questions. He thought more of them should be held during the year. Amongst the reforms introduced by the council of '97 and '98, he mentioned the institution of the Charity Board, which had saved much money for the town. The charity money which had been used for election purposes before was now well spent. A large saving had been accomplished, the dead-beats were circumvented and at the same time all deserving cases provided for. There had been another large leak in the legal department. All cases were now decided upon by the Legal Committee without the option of settling or going to law being left to the solicitor. The council had effected a saving of $8,105 in this department alone, as Mr. Edwards had everything to gain and nothing to lose by going to law. The by-law making taxes payable half yearly had also both to the town and the ratepayers. In the matter of the awarding of the pavement contracts, the speaker had advocated the insertion of a clause in the agreement whereby the workmen were to receive $1.25 per day. The town solicitor had declared that this would be illegal, but the speaker claimed that it was done in many of the cities. He had been opposed to the purchase of a crusher, as he was of the opinion that when work was scarce many labouring men were saved from appealing for charity by being given work on the stone piles. In connection with the purchase of a roller the speaker stated that he had looked up all the information he could on the subject and had received letters from those able to judge, to the effect that the Harrisburg was the best roller in the market and the Russel the worst. He thought it would be money well spent for the town to take over the waterworks and electric light systems, and also to convert the present Public Library into a free institution. He advocated that something be done in connection with the Street Railway. It was run in an unbusinesslike manner, beginning nowhere and ending nowhere.

Mr. C. B. Robertson stated that he had opposed the abolishing of the wards as not being in the interest of the working class. In connection with the he reminded the audience that it had almost paid for itself in furnishing stone for the pavement contractors. He said that his stand in favour of the Russel roller was taken by reason of the fact that he had seen the rollers and it was the best. The workmanship on it was honest, and on the Pitts it certainly was not. The fittings on the Russell were also far superior to those on the other. He was in favour of taking over the waterworks and electric light systems, as if the town was in a position to offer cheap water and power it would be a great inducement to manufactures to locate in Peterborough. He also advocated the purchase of several dams on the river. A free library would be too expensive. In regard to the street railway he expressed his confidence in the success of an extension to Lakefield.

Mr. N. T. Leplante was as much in favour of encouraging manufactures as any of the previous speakers, provided it did not prove too expensive. He would be pleased to see the town acquire the waterworks and electric systems, as both were costing the ratepayers too much. His large real estate interests in the town he thought was a sufficient guarantee that he would vote for economy.

Mr. George Ball referred the electors to his card in the papers as to his stand on public questions. He was in favour of the possible by the town and had he known that any other of the candidates would adopt this platform he would not have entered the field. As to the importance of acquiring these franchises he referred those present to the success attending similar ventures wherever attempted. The profits from these institutions should go to support the municipal government. Barrie, Hull, Orillia, Brantford and other places were taking over these franchises to assist in bearing the taxes.

Mr. J. L. Hughes did not detain the audience with any lenghty remarks. He thought that the public meeting should have taken a more general form. The candidates had taken up all the time, whereas he would have been pleased to hear a number of questions asked regarding municipal affairs. Had he been in the council last year he would have opposed the purchase of stone crusher, as he thought it was taking employment from the workingmen. He was much opposed to tax exemptions. All property exempted increased the burden of the taxpayers.

Mr. Hughes was the last speaker and at the close of his remarks a vote of thanks to Mr. Hall, the chairman, was moved by Mr. J. B. McWilliams and Mr. Jas. Kendry and carried on a standing vote.

Volcanic Eruptions.

TO THE ELECTORS —OF THE— TOWN OF PETERBOROUGH.

At the request of numerous ratepayers of the Town, I have consented to become a candidate for Alderman for 1899.

I therefore take this opportunity of soliciting your support, and if elected I will use my best judgment in regard to all matters that may come before the Council.

Hoping to be favored with your hearty support, I remain,

Your Obedient Servant,

JOHN CORKERY.

Peterborough, Dec. 28th, 1898

TO THE ELECTORS —OF THE— TOWN OF PETERBOROUGH.

Having been honored with the nomination for Alderman, I respectfully beg leave to solicit your votes and influence.

My views regarding the ownership of all public franchises are well known. I am strongly in favour of all municipal works, such as Light and Power supplies, Water Works, Telephones, etc., being under the control of the town, and I will support any such measure having this object in view.

If you do me the honor of electing me, I pledge myself to use my best judgment in encouraging manufactures and everything else that will aid the growth and prosperity of the town. I will also be found supporting careful economy in civic expenditures, consistent with the efficient management of our town affairs.

Being a live-long advocate of the interests of the working man, I can confidently solicit their support, and pledge myself to stand up for their rights on every occasion.

As it will be impossible for me to personally wait upon all the electors before polling day, I take this opportunity of soliciting your support.

Yours truly,

GEO. BALL.

MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS PETERBOROUGH.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—

As a Candidate for election to the position of Alderman, I respectfully solicit your support.

I can refer you to my record in your Town Council as having zealously looked after the best interests of the town. I hope, while soliciting support from the ratepayers of the town-at large, that my services will entitle me to a general support that will ensure my election. I can promise that I will use every endeavour to advance the best interests of the town and to see, as far as in my power lies, that due economy is exercised in all expenditures incurred. Again soliciting your support,

Yours respectfully,

CHAS. B ROBERTSON.

TO THE ELECTORS —OF THE— TOWN OF PETERBOROUGH

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—I find on further consideration that I don't want to be an Alderman this year. I therefore withdraw from the contest.

My thanks are due and are hereby tendered to the gentlemen who nominated me; also to all those who have offered to vote and work for my election.

Yours very respectfully,

J. L. HUGHES.

TO THE ELECTORS —OF THE— TOWN OF PETERBOROUGH.

Having been urged by many of the ratepayers of the town to become a candidate for Alderman, I have accepted the nomination.

I therefore beg leave to ask for your support, and, if elected, pledge myself to safeguard the interests of the town to the best of my ability.

Being a large property holder in the town, my interest in the honest management of municipal affairs should be a sufficient guarantee that I will always favour the most careful economy—at the same time exercising my best judgment in promoting the growth, progress and prosperity of the town.

Yours respectfully,

NOAH T. LePLANTE.

THE 3-CENT RATE GOES

Two-Cent Domestic Letter Rate to Go Into Effect January 1.

MULOCK'S NEW YEAR'S GIFT.

A Forward Move—Applicable to Letters Posted in Canada for the United States—A Boon to Business Men—Another Evidence of the Progressive Statesmanship of the Postmaster-General.

Ottawa, Dec. 30.—The Christmas box of inter-Imperial penny postage has been followed by a New Year's gift of a two cent letter rate throughout all Canada, beginning on January 1. Last season the Government, anticipating the adoption of inter-Imperial penny postage, secured the passage of a permissive Act authorizing them when they deemed it advisable to reduce the Canadian letter rate to two cents, and upon the London conference last fall naming Christmas as the day upon which Imperial penny postage should take effect, the Canadian Government decided to avail themselves of the powers conferred upon them and reduce the Canadian domestic letter rate from three to two cents at the earliest possible moment. The volume of correspondence of any portion of the Empire with the remainder of the Empire being comparatively small, the London postal conference concluded that the reduction to the penny rate, involving no serious financial consequences, should go into effect on the most appropriate day, and therefore selected Christmas, the day of the reunion of families and the revival of correspondence between friends throughout the whole of the British Empire. But the reduction of the domestic letter rate involving, as it does, very much larger considerations, it was necessary in fixing a day for its inauguration to have regard to the Canadian system of keeping the public accounts, according to which the fiscal year begins on July 1. In that view it was deemed advisable to bring the change into operation on the first day of the second half of the fiscal year, hence the selection of January 1. The proclamation of the Governor-General inaugurating the reduced domestic rate will appear in Saturday's Official Gazette.

A General Boon.

By the terms of the postal arrangment with the United States the reduction will apply to letters from Canada to that country. This further reform will no doubt be appreciated by all classes of Canadians, because it is bound to confer a boon upon everyone who uses the mail, particularly upon the business community. Already the reduction of the Imperial rate has furnished gratifying proofs of advantage to Canadian trade, and in a much larger degree will the domestic trade of the country be benefitted by this latest reduction. In this Mr. Mulock has added another to the many achievements which have marked his administration of the Post Office Department, and he has given a further proof of the possession of those qualities of progressive statesmanship so desirable in the public man of a young and advancing country like Canada. The reform also shows the deep interest taken by the Government in every movement calculated to advance the interests of trade and increase the prosperity of the country generally.

The New Stamp.

It has been decided that, the three-cent stamp no longer being required, there will be no more issues of it after the present supply is exhausted. The color of the domestic postage stamp, according to the suggestion of the Postal Union, being red, it will be necessary when the supply of the ordinary two-cent stamp, which is green, is exhausted, to change the color to that of the three-cent domestic stamps.

DELIBERATELY DONE.

Evidently Someone Was After Members of the Knickerbocker Club of New York—Two Arrests.

New York, Dec. 30.—It now appears that the bottle sent to young Cornish, supposed to contain bromo-seltzer, and which really was loaded with cyanide of potassium, and which killed Mrs. Kate J. Adams who took, as she thought, bromo-seltzer for a headache, was not the first bottle of the kind sent through the mails by some friend. Henry C. Barnet, who lived at the club and was in business at No. 95 Broad street, received a package of arsenic in November, part of which he took, believing it to be a harmless medicine known as hutnow powder. He died 12 days later. The immediate cause of death was inflammation of the lungs, but the fatal result was due to the weakening of the system by a mineral poison. Barnet was a member of the Knickerbocker Club, as was Cornish.

Mrs. Florence E. Rogers, the daughter of Mrs. Adams, killed by poison on Wednesday, was arrested yesterday and taken to police headquarters. With her was a young man, also under arrest, a cripple, who the detectives said was the son of Mrs. Rogers, but who, it was also stated, was the son of Mrs. Adams.

REBELS ATTACK THE BRITISH.

Sanguinary Fighting in East Africa—Lieut. Hannyton Wounded.

Calcutta, Dec. 30.—Advices received here from British East Africa say that on Oct. 10 a force of rebels attacked a detachment of 80 men belonging to the 27th Baluchis, commanded by Lieut. Hannynton, which was marching to Masindi. A native officer and 12 men were killed and nine men were wounded, including Lieut. Hannynton, who was shot through the right arm and had his left hand shattered by a bullet. The rear guard repulsed the enemy and the wounded were conveyed 14 miles to Kisalizi, on the western shore of Lake Kioga, which place was held by a company of Baluchis.

The rebels lost 100 men. Later the rebels attacked Kisalizi and lost 25 men.

The casualties on the British side were two men wounded. Troops, the advices added, were despatched to pursue the rebels.

The Baluchis engaged originally belonged to Col. Martyr's expedition, which left Uganda in October, going in the direction of the Nile, with the object of joining General Kitchener's forces. The Baluchis were left behind in Unyore, in order to dispose of the remnant of the Soudanese force which rebelled under Macdonald and took refuge at Unyore.

Has Arrived With His Dogs.

Quebec, Dec. 30.—The family of Mr. Ignace Hebert, residing in this city, have received a letter from him, dated at Skaguay, in which he states that he has arrived at that place safely. Mr. Hebert left here in the first days of November last, with 142 dogs, for the Yukon, which had been purchased on the coasts of Labrador and shipped under the superintendence of Mr. J. U. Gregory. Out of the 142 canines, 128 have arrived in excellent condition. The other 14 escaped on the way. Mr. Hebert states that they have given good satisfaction and are just what was required for this work.

There Will Be No Papal Delegate.

Rome, Dec. 30.—On advice of the Sacred College, the Pope has decided not to send a representative to the Czar's disarmament conference at St. Petersburg. Although the Pope is much interested in the Czar's peace proposal and warmly endorses it, the political disputes between the Vatican and the Italian Government rendered Papal representation unadvisable. Italy declined to send a representative if the Vatican were recognized.

Horse Meat Confiscated.

New York, Dec. 30.—Inspectors of the Board of Health have confiscated 1,500 pounds of horse flesh at the depot of the American Express Company, 48th street and Madison avenue, and sent it to the official dock. The meat came from Roff & Gifford, Sidney Centre, Delaware County, New York.

POWERS OF A COLONY

An Important Message From Hon. Joseph Chamberlain.

TEXT OF THE FAMOUS DESPATCH

The Governor of Newfoundland Instructed in the Limits of the Prerogative of Disallowance—Legislature Possessed Full Powers of Dealing With Reid's Contract—Must Accept Responsibility.

St. John's, Nfld., Dec. 30.—Gov. Murray has made public the text of the message received by him from Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, Secretary of State for the Colonies, in which the Secretary finally and definitely refused to disallow the Reid railway contract, or to interfere in colonial affairs, the purport of which previously was made known. The message is regarded as a rebuke to the Governor and is considered an important pronouncement on the constitutional and legislative control which the Imperial authorities may safely exercise over colonial questions.

The message of the Colonial Secretary, after acknowledging the receipt of copies of the resolutions passed at the public meeting of the inhabitants of St. John's in October, urging that Her Majesty should be advised either to disallow the Act passed in the recent session of the Legislature of Newfoundland, to give effect to the contract with Mr. Reid, or that in any case, he should defer tendering advice to Her Majesty in regard to the Act until the people of the colony have had opportunity of expressing their views on the question at a general election, goes on:

"The step which I am urged to take is one for which there is no precedent in the history of colonial administration. The measure, the disallowance of which is sought, is not only of purely local concern, but one the provisions of which are almost exclusively of a financial and administrative character. The right to complete and unfettered control over financial policy and arrangements is essential to self-government, and has been invariably acknowledged and respected by Her Majesty's Government and jealously guarded by the colonies. The Colonial Government and the Legislature are purely responsible for the management of its finances to the people of the colony, and unless Imperial interests of great importance are imperilled, the intervention of Her Majesty's Government in such matters would be an unwarrantable intrusion, and a breach of the charter of the colony.

"It is nowhere alleged that the interests of any other part of the empire are involved, or that the Act is in any way repugnant to Imperial legislation. It is asserted, indeed, that the contract disposed of assets of the colony over which its creditors in this country have an equitable, if not a legal, claim, but, apart from the fact that the assets in question are mainly potential, and that the security for the colonial debt is its general revenue, not any particular property or assets, I cannot admit that the creditors of the colony have any right to claim the interference of Her Majesty's Government in the matter. It is on the faith of the Colonial Government and Legislature that they have advanced the money, and it is to them that they must appeal if they consider themselves injured. No doubt if it was seriously alleged that the Act involved a breach of faith or confiscation of the rights of absent persons Her Majesty's Government would have to examine it carefully, and consider whether the discredit such action on the part of a colony would entail on the rest of the Empire rendered it necessary for them to intervene. But no such charge is made. If Her Majesty's Government were to intervene whenever the Legislature of a colony was alleged to affect the rights of non-residents, the rights of self-government would be restricted, in very narrow limits, and complications and confusion from the division of authority must arise.

"It is not the duty of Her Majesty's Government to attempt the task of deciding whether the Act of the Legislature has been in accord with the opinion of the electorate. Even a Governor, who was to some extent endowed with local opinion, would be taking a serious step if in response to petitions such as have been addressed to me, and against the advice of his Ministers, he refused to assent to a measure of local concern which has been duly passed by the Legislature, and if he failed to find other Ministers prepared to assume the responsibility for his action, and able to secure the support of the Legislature, his position would become untenable. Any such step on the part of a Governor would have to be taken entirely on his own motion. It is essential that for every act of the Governor in local matters full responsibility should attach to a Ministry amenable to the Colonial Legislature.

"Considerations which preclude me from advising Her Majesty to disallow the Act, apply equally to the alternative request that I should refer tendering advice to Her Majesty in regard to it, until the people of the colony have had an opportunity of expressing their views on the matter.

"The Act is already in force, and the contract to which it gives effect, has been in part already performed, and the continuing obligation of the contractor would not be suspended until Her Majesty's pleasure was finally declared. It remains in full force until the Act is disallowed or appealed. It would be unjust, therefore, to the contractor, and would only add to the already heavy liabilities of the colony, to accede to the prayers of the petitions.

"My action throughout has been governed solely by constitutional principles, on which I am bound to act, and I think it desirable that it should be made quite clear that, in accepting the full responsibility, inseparable from that privilege, if the machinery it has provided for the work of legislation and administration has proved defective, or the persons to whom it has entrusted its destinies have failed to discharge their trust, they cannot look to Her Majesty's Government to supplement or remedy these defects, or to judge between them and their duly chosen representatives. I have, etc.,

"(Signed.) Chamberlain."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE Mail and Empire says "the Red Rose League is needed. Every Conservative should help it along." The party is tired of the thorns in the by-paths of the cold shades, and now longs for the roses.

PROF. E. STONE WIGGINS, of Ottawa, the civil service savant, has gone out of business as a weather prophet owing to lack of popular appreciation. He didn't mind the refusal of the weather to verify his predictions, but he was pained with lack of pats on the back.

THE Toronto star says: "The day grew colder for Conservatives. Loughrin's majority went up from 470 to 611 and is still rising. Allan's majority came down from 580 to 256 and is still sinking." If this drop continues Mr. Whitney's boasted triumph in North Hastings will develop into a moral victory.

GOLDWIN Smith, in the Farmer's Sun says: To build a great navy will be no hard matter for the Americans. It will be harder to man it. Protectionism has protected their mercantile marine out of existence, and even if it had not, seamen cannot be produced at once with the special training required by the battleships of the new style. England will have to take care that her seamen are not drawn off by the high pay offered in the American service. Her own navy is said to be short of men, and her mercantile marine is known to be largely manned by foreign seamen.

IN addition to the town of Peterborough three Ontario cities will on Monday next try the experiment of electing their aldermen by the votes of all the electors. Ten aldermen are to be chosen in each of the cities. In Belleville 33 candidates have been nominated; in St. Catharines, 30 and in Chatham, 25. As this is an average of nearly three candidates for each representative post, a much larger number than in any city or town where the contests are on the ward system, the new plan, the Ottawa Journal thinks, would seem to have the merit of offering an ample choice.

THE Toronto World which two years ago was prancing proudly on the high protectionist horse and, like a herald, proclaiming ruin to the industries of the country and the ruin of all things if a Liberal Government came into power, has this to say after two years of Liberal rule: "Canada is on the dawn of happy days. The long years of depression—the seven lean years—are over; the seven fat years are coming—the happy days. The man of the hour is the man who believes in happy days. Happy days is the watchword in municipal affairs, in national politics. When you greet your friends greet them with happy days. If you have suffered from real estate depression welcome the happy days. Happy days, the word henceforth for old and young, for rich and poor."

THE London Daily Graphic denounces the motto for the Canadian imperial penny postage stamps—"we hold a vaster Empire than has been"—because it suggests brag and "will excite the dislike and ridicule of other nations." The truth expressed in the motto so disparaged no doubt excites the dislike of others, but Canada will have no share in knocking the empire to pieces because some jealous nation would like it. Canada wishes to strengthen the bonds and Mr. Mulock's stamp is designed to make it "stick" together. If it comes to the test the Empire can "lick" these disgruntled nations as well as a postage stamp. Expression of the truth as is conveyed in the motto objected to is not bragging. Besides, an occasional reminder of the Empire's strength acts as a wholesome pointer to the nations that envy and dislike our greatness.

THE ENEMIES OF ONTARIO.

(London Advertiser.)

That was a good point which Dr. Macdonald, M. P., made at a recent meeting in West Huron. He said the Conservative leaders pretended that unless a change of Government took place in the Province, direct taxation would ensue. While scouting this argument as most ill-founded, Dr. Macdonald showed that the only people in this Province who ever worked to bring upon the people direct taxation were the Opposition, who consented to the passage of the Dominion License Law, by means of which it was intended to deprive the Province of an annual revenue of something like $300,000. These Opposition leaders also were quite ready to despoil Ontario of 97,000 square miles of its richest territory, so that it might be parceled out to the favourites of the late Government at Ottawa. If these schemes of the Conservative leaders had been successful, there would have been little doubt that direct taxation would have been resorted to at no distant day; but, fortunately for the country, Sir Oliver Mowat, Hon. A. S. Hardy and the stalwart Ontario-firstmen in the Administration successfully resisted the onslaught, undertaken in the interests of the hangers-on who were so plentiful at the Dominion capital during the late regime, and they were supported by the people as a whole. These are some of the reasons why the present Administration is heartily supported at the polls. But the tendency of gerrymandered Ontario has always been Liberal, as will be seen when, in Dominion elections, the people are permitted to vote in their county divisions, and with a voters' list compiled fairly and honestly by the municipal officials.

DOINGS OF A SWINDLER.

He Assumes Another Name and Sells Worthless Eye Glasses.

(Campbellford Herald.)

About three weeks ago a young man of French extraction travelled through a part of Seymour township selling eyeglasses, the rims of which he warranted to be gold. He assumed the name of Prof. De Silberg, and to give assurance of his personage, he carried with him a number of cards printed in the same kind of type as those of De Silberg, and worded the same except the omission of the name of the street.

People who saw in this paper the notice of Prof. De Silberg's visit to Campbellford did business with him, and much to their sorrow, as they have learned too late, that the fellow was a swindler and they have paid dearly for what they got from him. In Meyersburg and vicinity he sold several of his gold-rimmed glasses which he valued at $5, for $3, $2, and as low as 50 cents. He played the game with people in Seymour east, having succeeded in getting $15 from one person. The swindler worked his way towards the vicinity of Springbrook, where he no doubt fleeced many others.

One of the victims residing at Meyersburg who bought a pair of glasses that are worthless at night, came to Campbellford on Friday to have a sharp interview with Prof. De Silberg, but when he confronted that gentleman he saw at a glance that he was not the man.

At the time the fellow was doing his work in this locality, Prof. De Silberg was at Madoc, and it is likely he worked his plans in that way, going through the country about the time that De Silberg announced his visit. A constable should be sent out to look after him.

THE BUFFALO EXPRESS.

From the day it started, away back in 1865, the Illustrated Buffalo Express has had some excellent features which are peculiarly its own. It has individuality. Its illustrations are not haphazard pictures, but relate to the news. As a rule they are artistic. The Express is better printed than the average newspaper. Unlike many newspapers that publish pictures, there is something to its illustrated pages beside illustrations. Its special correspondence, literary articles and general reading are always full of enjoyment and of information that is worth having. Add to this the full, well-edited pages of the Illustrated Express that contain the news of the day, and we have as near an approach to an ideal newspaper as can any where be found.

KINGSTON'S RECORD

For Producing Famous Men and Dodd's Kidney Pills Cures.

Kingston, Dec. 19th.—The Limestone City has given Canada a majority of her greatest and most famous men. Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Oliver Mowat, Sir Geo. Kirkpatrick, Sir Richard Cartwright, and many other notable personalities claim the city as their home.

Kingston is no less famous as the scene of many of the most wonderful and startling cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills, than for the first named reason.

Now another is added to this long list of cures. Mr. Robert Orr, Pine street, reports that after suffering for years with Bladder trouble, Dodd's Kidney Pills completely cured him, though all other remedies had failed. Every city has a similar experience. Dodd's Kidney Pills have cured every time.

So they got down on their hands and knees, and Sammy he got in the mud and wollered, while Billy bellered like distant thunder. Bimeby Sammy he cum out muddy—you never see such a muddy little feller—and he said, "Now you be the pig, and let me beller." But Billy said, "I ain't a very good pig 'fore dinner, and it'll be time 'nuff for you to beller when yer mother sees yer close."—Scrap Book.

A STATESMAN WANTED.

One Who Will Justly Ascertain the Aspirations of the Filipinos—The Occupation of Iloilo.

Manila, Dec. 30.—A special to The New York Herald says: Admiral Dewey considers it absolutely necessary that a first-class statesman be sent to Manila to thoroughly investigate the situation here and ascertain the aspirations of the Filipino Republicans. He further states that the United States must accept their responsibilities in the Philippines which have been acquired by conquest. If they should shirk this duty they would put themselves back 200 years in the world's history.

The Occupation of Iloilo.

Manila, P.I., Dec. 30.—Details regarding the occupation of Iloilo by the insurgents have just been received here. The American expedition commanded by Brigadier-General Miller arrived there yesterday and found that the Spaniards had evacuated the place on Saturday on board the steamer Churnea, and had been transferred to the Island of Mindanao, in accordance with an agreement arrived at with the insurgents. The latter entered Iloilo and occupied the trenches on Monday at 10am. They immediately established a municipal government and placed guards over foreign property. The insurgents were fairly quiet and orderly, although there was some looting at night. But five of the natives were shot, which had an exemplary effect upon the rest. The only foreign warship in the harbor was the German second-class cruiser Irene.

The Chronicle's Suggestion.

London, Dec. 30.—The Daily Chronicle, editorially discussing the situation at Iloilo, says: It would be advisable for the insurgents to defy the Americans. The issue would then be squarely raised and settled once for all in one short, sharp action, which would probably bring the crazy Filipinos to their senses. After this the men of peace could proceed with their business.

HER NECK WAS BROKEN.

Two Hamilton Youths Missing—May Be Drowned in the Bay.

Hamilton, Dec. 30.—Mrs. Eliza Farr of St. Catharines met her death last evening very suddenly. She was on a visit to her daughter, Mrs. Donald Hodd, 135 West avenue north, and went into the yard to gather some clothes from the line. While doing so her foot slipped and she fell, her head striking on a pail. Mrs. Hodd heard her moans and hurried to her side, but she died almost immediately. Dr. Bangle, who was called, found that Mrs. Farr's neck had been broken by the fall. Deceased was 59 years of age.

Two youths, John Higham and Albert Smith, employed at Fearman's factory, are missing, and it is feared they have been drowned in the bay. They went on the bay to skate Wednesday afternoon and were seen by a man who was erecting a fish hut skating westward towards Carroll's Point. They were warned that the ice was unsafe, but they kept on. They had not been heard of yesterday, and it is thought they have fallen into one of the ice holes.

Baby Eczema and Scald Head.

Infants and young children are peculiarly subject to this terrible disorder, and if not promptly arrested it will eventually become chronic. Dr Chase made a special study of eczema and diseases of the skin, and we can confidently recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to cure all forms of eczema. The first application soothes the irritation and puts the little sufferer to rest.

A NEW INVENTION

The Newcombe Piano Has It.

It consists of a Patented Practice CLAVIER or STOP which diminishes the tone when required and saves wear on the Piano; it also does away with the old way of having to press down the pedal with the foot in order to soften the tone when running the scales or practicing. Oftentimes the young pupil on the piano cannot press down on the pedal without throwing themselves out of the proper position when they should sit erect. This invention in the NEWCOMBE PIANO will enable children to begin two years earlier on the piano. In addition to the above, the NEWCOMBE PIANO is the finest made in Canada. Children often complain about practicing; they like it if they have a NEWCOMBE PIANO. 1898 styles are gems of art, containing every late improvement; they possess that beautiful full sweet tone which delights the singer, and so pleases every musical ear. Organs of every description at Wholesale Prices.

Big Bargains now on hand in slightly used. Upright and Square Pianos of the various makes taken in part exchange for the famous NEWCOMBE PIANOS. OUR SOLDIER SCHOOL BOYS

Will Have Martini-Henry Rifles Instead of Sniders.

Ottawa, Dec. 30.—The Militia Department has decided to recall the issue of Snider rifles given to the different corps of the public schools and colleges throughout Canada, and to issue Martini-Henry rifles in their stead.

The reason for this is that the Martini-Henry rifles are a later arm than the Snider and will give the school boys and young men better training for the Lee-Enfield, the arm now used by the militia. As a matter of fact, the militia authorities would prefer, if possible, to issue the Lee-Enfield rifles to the school boys, as the new rifle is much more suitable for the use of the young recruits. This is owing to its lightness and good shooting qualities.

THEY TALK OF WAR.

The Situation in the Transvaal Growing Extremely Serious—Picturesquely Inflammatory Utterances.

Johannesburg, Dec. 30.—The situation in the Transvaal, brought about by a collision between the Boers and Englishmen, is growing uglier. Both sides are in a mood for violence, and the Rand Post openly discusses war with England. It says: "We advise upon a fixed act of war. Let the women and children on the English side be sent away from the city, and with them those persons evilly disposed to us. Then let Johannesburg be destroyed and the perpetrators of the turbulences here be taken and thrown into the shafts of their own mines. Let Johannesburg be converted into a rubbish heap, as a tombstone to the authors of our troubles."

The Johannesburg Star is more moderate in its expressions, and warns the Post that its violent tone will precipitate a crisis.

Warning From South Africa.

London, Dec. 30.—The Johannesburg correspondent of The Daily Mail, who utters a warning against the optimistic reports cabled to London in the Kruger interest, says: "I have interviewed the British consul, who says the Saturday demonstration impressed him as based upon deep public feeling, while the deputation which presented the petition was, to his personal knowledge, composed of men of high character and standing."

Pain in the Back.

Being troubled off and on with pains in my back, caused by constipation, I tried several kinds of pills I had seen advertised, and to put the truth in a nut shell, Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are the only pills that have proved effectual in my case. I can heartily recommend them

A HIGHLY SUCCESSFUL CHRISTMAS TREAT.

UNDER CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY AUSPICES.

Three or Four Hundred Children Made Happy—A Bountiful Repast Greatly Enjoyed—A Fine Programme of Music, Etc., Presented—The Bounty of Santa Claus Crowns the Occasion.

Last night a most delightful Christmas-tide treat and entertainment was, through the bounty of the citizens, provided for those children of the town whose circumstances prevented enjoying a Christmas tree at home.

The market hall was the scene of the beneficent banquet, and it was beautifully garbed for the occasion. Messrs. J. J. Turner & Sons decorated the hall profusely and beautifully with flags and bunting, evergreens and suitable mottoes, and in keeping with the spirit of the occasion, did it on Gospel terms—"without money and without price." In the decorations the Stars and Stripes got into good company, and were twined at various points with the Union Jack.

The southern half of the hall was spread with several long tables, brightly decked and heavily laden, and was devoted to the feast of good things and the flow of tea, while the northern end was seated for the feast of reason and the flow of soul. A large platform was extended across the northern end of the hall, fronted with a frame work whose top was covered with evergreens and starred by a row of coloured electric lights. At one end of the platform two large Christmas trees loaded with Christmas presents screened off a corner which was the lair of Santa Claus, of whom more anon.

Six o'clock was the hour appointed for the figurative ringing of "that tocsin of the soul, the dinner call," but long before that hour detachments of the society's little guests had invaded the hall and skillfully deployed into line of attack. The air of eager expectancy and of eagerness, like Wellington's guard, to be "up and at them" was more than the ladies could withstand and, the signal given, the tables were speedily filled and for nearly two hours repeated relays of guests filled the tables and were in turn bountifully filled. The appointments of the feast were all that could be desired, the arrangements made by the ladies for waiting were excellent and great tact and readiness of resource were shown in meeting the emergencies that arise when the elements are mercurial and hungry children and the probable demand an unknown quantity. However, things were excellently managed and it is estimated that between 300 and 400 children shared the hospitality of the citizens of the town, expressed through the self sacrifice made by the officials of the Children's Aid Society and the kind ladies and others that co-operated with them.

At the conclusion of the feast, about 7.30, the children massed themselves in front of the platform—as near as possible to the brilliantly decked Christmas tree. By some happy inspiration somebody got seated at the pianoforte, and starting up the air, "There'll be a Hot Time," the children joined in and sang it with perhaps more spirit than finish, but splendidly after all. It was pleasant to see a local clergyman, who got entangled in the press in an attempt to maintain a semblance of order, gracefully accepting the situation and renewing his youth by joining heartily in the strains of a "Hot Time," "Rosy O'Grady," etc.—not a bad exemplification of becoming as little children in innocency of spirit and sympathy with their innocent joyousness.

For a time a happy chaos of laughter and spirited jostle prevailed, but at length some approximation to order was gained. By this time the half of the hall north of the doors was packed with the general public, in addition to the children-guests who occupied the front, and every one aiming to be in the foremost rank, the result was a human replica of a big box of eleemosynary sardines. At last the Fifty Seventh Band on one side of the hall wormed its way to the platform, and on the other the members of Mr. Crane's chorus wriggled their way to the same point of vantage.

Mr. A. L. Davis occupied the chair at the beginning of the programme, and after regretting his inability to remain the evening on account of a council meeting, spoke as follows:

It is with the highest degree of pleasure that I, on behalf of the Society that has this entertainment in charge, bid you welcome to-night. The organization of the Children's Aid Society marks the beginning of a new epoch in moral reform and the work of benevolence in Peterborough. No nobler work can be engaged in than that of making the lives of children happier, brighter and better, and this Society does so, not solely with a view to the protection or welfare of the State, but because of a love for the little ones themselves. That is the noble foundation upon which the Society rests, and with such a spirit animating the members it cannot fail to be a power for good. I am pleased, as are the members of the Society, and the ladies of the churches who have co-operated with it, to see so many children present. That the first part of the evening's entertainment has been enjoyed I feel sure, and so I have no doubt will be that part which is to come. It is a matter of gratification that so many ladies and gentlemen have shown their interest in the work of the Society by their presence, and no doubt the Society will be strengthened and encouraged as a result of this evening's effort. Preparations have been made for a pleasant evening, and we will now enter upon the excellent programme that has been prepared.

Mr. J. J. McBain, president of the Children's Aid Society, then took the chair and introduced the programme.

The first number was a selection by the Fifty-Seventh Band, and the finished manner of the performance elicited hearty applause, which developed into the wildest enthusiasm, on the part of the children, especially, when the second number, "The Forge in the Forest," with its striking realistic effects, was splendidly performed. The youngsters went into ecstacies, and a repeat was demanded with shrill insistence of shrieks and persistent patter of little palms, and the elders would have been well pleased if the band had responded, but the programme had to give way to Santa Claus and the Christmas tree distribution and was cut short as possible. Then followed a brief address.

Mr. Peter Hamilton, chairman of the Board of Education, after a few pleasant preliminary remarks, said the children present should remember that in a few years they would take the place of the adults they saw around them. If the children started right, and were honest, upright and truthful to the right, they would make worthy members of society. The children of Peterborough possessed advantages that were not enjoyed in a superior degree anywhere else in the world.

Mr. Crane's chorus then sang with excellent effect the Bridal chorus from the "Rose Maiden," which was followed by a duet, "Albion," sung with much spirit and fine effect by Messrs. Walden and Crane.

Rev. S. J. Shorey, pastor of the George street Methodist church, began a brief address by congratulating himself that he was a member of the Children's Aid Society and also congratulated every other member. It was a grand thing to be able, as we were doing on this occasion, to join together irrespective of class or creed. From its operations and results the Children's Aid Society should be called the State Aid Society, because everything that uplifted the rising generation, was a help to the State. He impressed the children with the idea of their great responsibility by being citizens of the greatest and best country of t world. (Cheers. They were urged to build up character, the greatest of possessions and though all could not be rich, all could be good. He concluded by wishing the children a happy new year.

Another splendid selection was contributed by Mr. Crane's chorus, followed by a recitation by Master Holden Blackwell, who took the house by storm. This time there was no denying the children, who seemed determined, if they didn't get at the Christmas tree till midnight, to have another "piece." Master Blackwell responded to the appeal with another splendid recitation. The children even then demanded "more," but the amiable "Bumble" that occupied the chair had to put his foot down on this "owdacious" imitation of Oliver Twist. Master Blackwell's excellently rendered numbers were Eugene Field's "Bad Boy before Christmas" and "Seeing Things at Night."

Mr. Mulligan sang with splendid spirit and effect the stirring solo "Albion," which met with the hearty applause it deserved.

Rev. H. Symonds, in beginning his address, gave a little history of "how we happened to be here." This banquet had its beginning at a little sewing circle in the interest of the Children's Aid Society, at the residence of the indefatigable secretary, Miss Clarke. And the proposal to have a little social time was turned over in Miss Clarke's mind—"and an excellent mind it was," remarked Mr. Symonds—and through her the officers were interested into co-operation and then the churches became interested in the cause, then the citizens heartily falling in, the present entertainment was the result. It might be called the town's entertainment, and the children were to regard themselves as the guests of the town. You are our guests and we want to show you that a warm fraternal feeling of interest and solicitude prevails among all classes of citizens. Mr. Symonds went on to specify that we had a splendid president of the Children's Aid Society in Mr. McBain, who, though he effaces himself, does an immense amount of quiet work, and an excellent secretary, Miss Clarke, who freely and gladly gives her services to the society; and the children, as these names were mentioned, gave hearty cheers—appreciative of their services. Mr. Symonds also remarked that there was a gentlemen who was modestly not on the programme, who was instrumental in starting the Children's Aid Society, who should have the utmost credit, and he was also greeted with a salvo of cheers. Mr. Symonds concluded by pointing out that the material enjoyments of the evening were not the highest significance of the gathering—it gained its chief importance from the fact that 1,898 years ago a little baby was born, and without His birth we should not have been here under the happy conditions that prevailed that evening.

A closing chorus that was delightfully appreciated was "Where are you going, my pretty maid," which, followed by "God Save the Queen," brought the programme to a close. Miss Hurley skilfully performed the accompaniments for the chorus.

THE CHRISTMAS TREE.

Then for a moment a market hall pandemonium broke out. The children made a frantic rush en masse to the corner where the Christmas trees were placed and when from his lair appeared Mr. J. E. Belcher, C. E., in the traditional guise of Santa Claus, a shriek of clamourous applause broke out and made the very rafters ring so that even Santa Claus looked up, apprehensive for the roof he had planned. Then an indescribable scene ensued as the hirsute saint, whose Corkonian brogue sounded sweet in the ears of the little children, took an article from the trees their names were called. Rev. J. C. Davidson and Rev. H. Symonde assisted in the delightful distribution and as the time progressed other help had to be called in. It took an hour and a half to clear the trees, and about two hundred children were made happy by the gifts of toys, sweets, dolls, etc. The discrepancy in number between the 200 Christmas tree beneficiaries and the nearly 400 feasted, was represented by larger children, who had been remembered in the form of more useful presents, that, is those of school age had been presented with boots and shoes, coats, cloaks, etc., to permit them to attend school. It is one of the conditions of the Society that children of school age, who are helped in the way of clothing, shall attend both day and Sunday school. The Society does its part, and insists on the children doing theirs. The fact of so many of the children appearing so comfortably clad is due, to the help given by the Children's Aid Society. Another pleasing feature was that many of the larger girls appeared dressed in the clothing made by themselves in the sewing classes at the Shelter. The motto of the Society is not mere help, but help to self help.

NOTES.

The great success of the entertainment is to be attributed to the Executive Committee of the Children's Aid Society, together with the co-operation of the Auxiliary Committee, representing the several churches, and to the general practical sympathy of the best citizens with the undertaking. The Auxiliary Committee representing the several churches was composed of the following ladies and gentlemen:

St. John's—Rev J C Davidson, Miss Halliday, Miss Fair.

St. Luke's—Rev H Symonds, Mrs Peck, Mr R B Rogers, Miss M Calcutt.

All Saints—Miss Chamberlen and Mrs W Buller.

Baptist church—Miss Aldridge, Mrs Scott and Miss Roberts.

St. Paul's—Mrs Sheriff Hall, Mrs R Innes and Miss Jessie Dennistoun.

St. Peter's—Mrs (Dr) O'Sullivan, Mrs T Cahill and Mrs Justus B Dunn.

George street Methodist—Mrs James Kendry, Mrs F Mason, Mrs J J McBain.

Charlotte street Methodist—Mrs A L Davis, Mrs Aaron Cox, Mrs M A Morrison.

St. Andrew's—Mrs Matthieson, Miss Lundy, Miss Forsythe

Mark street, Ashburnham—Mrs Wand, Mrs (Rev) Moore and Mrs M W Matchett.

One of the most delightful features of the occasion was the cordial spirit of harmony with which the representatives of the different creeds worked together. In this respect there was not a single hitch on this occasion, which for the good of the world, should be indefinitely multiplied in respect of this spirit. The slender differences in details of doctrine and practice were swept away and all were animated with the common spirit of a common Saviour, whose new commandment was love and whose special wards were little children. And social distinctions were for the moment swept away and ladies—the highest in social position—were industrious in nursing and caring for the babies of women whose misfortune was lack of worldly goods, thus illustrating the spirit of helpfulness which is after all merely the spirit of charity, (in its godly sense) in concrete form—merely love in action. And in this in a great degree consisted the object of the gathering—which was not to foster dependence but to arouse the latest spark of self-reliance that exists in every human breast, by the stimulus of encouragement and the excitation of the spirit of hopefulness, which by adverse fate has in many cases been almost extinguished. There was no evidence of the tone of patronage to offend the most sensitive.

Another feature of the gathering was the generally excellent behaviour of the children. True they were at times boisterous—but it was the children's night and for one night they had a perfect right to be children all over.

The entertainment was a splendid success in every respect and the active promoters are deeply grateful for the assistance received from all quarters, including those who so kindly assisted in the programme.

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION.

To Mr. John Armstrong Last Evening in Ashburnham.

At the residence of Mr. H. S. Armstrong, choir leader of the Mark street Methodist choir, Ashburnham, a very pleasant event occurred. Several members of the choir were present, and Mr. John Armstrong, organist, and Mrs. Armstrong were in attendance by invitation.

After all had assembled Mr. H. S Armstrong read an address, and Miss Annie M. Smith, presented Mr. J. Armstrong with a well-filled purse on behalf of the choir and the congregation, as a slight recognition of his very efficient services as organist of the Mark street church.

Mr. Armstrong made a suitable reply, and after a few hours of pleasant social intercourse, the happy gathering dispersed, after wishing Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong a very happy and prosperous New Year.

"TAX EXEMPTIONS."

A Mixed Discussion on the Subject.

The regular weekly meeting of the Y.M.C.A. Debating Club held last evening was undoubtedly the best of the season thus far. The attendance surpassed all former meetings and the able discussion and brilliant addresses sent forth the arguments for and against "Tax Exemptions," showed the debaters to be possessed of good debating ability.

Dr. Rose and Mr. B. Anderson took the affirmative side of the question, "Resolved that tax exemptions be abolished."

Messrs. F. D. Kerr and G. S. Bell argued for the negative.

The decision of the audience was in favour of the latter, though it was admitted the affirmative won on the question of principle.

Able speeches were made by Messrs. W. F. Kerr, of Cobourg, A. E. Dixon, W. H. Hill and F. Ray.

The following is the programme for the next two evenings:

Jan. 5—Debate, "Resolved that the Government of Canada are justified in passing legislation to totally exclude Chinese immigration into Canada." Affirmative, Messrs J. W. Bennett and F. Ray; negative, Messrs. W. H. Hill and A. E. Dixon.

Jan. 12—Two "Papers" on the history of 1898, (a) National, (b) International.

Refreshments will be served from 2 to 10 p.m. by the Ladies' Auxiliary.

C. P. R. Tourist Sleepers.

Through the courtesy of Mr. T. E Boddy, up-town C.P.R. agent, the EXAMINER has a chance of admiring a beautifully printed and illustrated new booklet entitled, "Travelling comfort in a Canadian Pacific Tourist Sleeper." The booklet tells the public that they have put into commission for the Atlantic-Pacific and Intermediate passenger traffic twenty new tourist sleepers, the most magnificent of productions in the line of sleepers. The little book describes these comfort carrying cars as of first class construction, equipment, finish and arrangement in every respect, uniformly warm in winter and thoroughly ventilated. So complete are these new cars that, though they are primarily intended for second class tickets, first class ticket holders who prefer economy with almost equal luxury, are quite willing to take advantage of the splendid new C.P.R. Tourist Sleepers.

A CONSTABLE'S TAKE.

Captures Frank Phalen, a Supposed Demented Man From Lakefield, Who Was Wandering About Barefoot.

East Toronto, Dec. 30.—The village had a treat of rather an exciting character yesterday morning in the form of a steeplechase between Constable Tidsberry and a half-demented creature who was classed on the program as "unknown." The constable won the race, and managed to land the unknown, who turned out to be, as he claims, Frank Phalen of Lakefield, which is nine miles north of Peterboro.

Phalen was first noticed at the Harris glue factory about 7 o'clock in the morning, and as he became obnoxious, Constable Tidsberry was summoned. When the constable arrived on the scene, about 9 o'clock, Phalen had made tracks to the northward. The fugitive had got out of range by this time, but the constable started out in pursuit on foot, and at times was able, by following the tracks in the snow, to catch an occasional glimpse of the fleeing man, but Phalen continued in his northward direction, over the ice and through the brush, until he was finally captured by the constable about two miles above Wexford, after a chase of over two hours.

Phalen, shoeless and stockingless, when overtaken, presented a pitiable sight. His clothes were torn by the barbs on the wire fences, and his feet were a bloody spectacle, with not a particle of skin on the soles. He was taken before Magistrate Ormerod and remanded for a week.

The prisoner claims to come from Lakefield. He is about 27 years of age. He is clean shaven, and, at the time of his capture wore a brown suit and a black fedora.

TO THE ELECTORS
OF THE
Town of Peterborough.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN

Having been nominated as a candidate for the office of Mayor and received promise of a hearty support, I felt it only due the wishes of my supporters to stay in the field and contest the issue to the end.

During the last few days I have been urged by personal friends to withdraw from the contest, and after consideration and in deference to their wishes and as I feel the weight of advancing years I have decided to retire. There is no doubt that my continuing in the field will place me in antagonism with friends within a public and private capacity, and this I sincerely wish to avoid.

I heartily thank all who offered me support and who would, I know, have worked untiringly to secure my return, and beg to subscribe myself,

Yours very respectfully,
WM. YELLAND.

TO THE ELECTORS
OF THE
Town of Peterborough.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:

Having been honoured with the nomination for Mayor for 1899, I respectfully solicit your votes and influence to elect me to that important and honourable office for a second term.

Besides the recognized practice in the past that the Chief Magistrate of the town should have a renewal of the confidence and support of the electors, I feel that my record during the past year entitles me to a continuance of the trust which you generously reposed in me a year ago.

During the past year I have spent a very large portion of my time and devoted my best energies to the advancement of the town and if again honoured with your support I shall continue to do my utmost to advance the material welfare of Peterborough by supporting as broad and liberal a policy in the management of its affairs as is consistent with the resources of the town and a reasonable rate of taxation, so that she may continue to keep her place among the foremost towns of the Dominion.

Wishing you a happy and prosperous year, I am

Your obedient servant,
A. L. DAVIS.

TO THE RATEPAYERS
OF PETERBOROUGH.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—I am in nomination as one of your Aldermen for the year 1899, and solicit your votes and influence to secure my return.

I hope to be extended a hearty support. The future of our town depends upon judicious action by your Town Council. If elected, I engage to give my best attention to your municipal affairs and to work intelligently and faithfully to secure the best possible results.

Respectfully yours,
R. S. DAVIDSON.

HUMAN SACRIFICES

On the Altar of Diabetes, Saved by Dodd's Kidney Pills, Only.

Hardly a family in the country is free from Diabetes. Great thirst, failing sight, numbness in the thighs, bleeding gums, swollen ankles, emaciation, nervou ness, pale or turbid urine, loss of sexual power, decaying teeth, pains in the loins or small of the back, are all positive signs that Diabetes is in the system.

Do you know how it ends? In Death. A premature, horrible, agonized, pitiful death. The victim has no peace, no ease in life. His days are filled with tortures. His nights are waking dreams of agony. He longs to die, yet fears the terrors of his end. He dies, a bloated, fetid, repulsive mass of corruption. That is the only end of unchecked Diabetes. Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure it. They drive it out of the system thoroughly, create new, clean blood, rebuild the diseased kidneys, and restore robust health.

AN ENCHANTED GROVE.

Buzzing Bees That Cannot Be Found and a Mysterious Hammering.

Away back in the fifties there was a Shawnee Indian village on the South Canadian river, about 80 miles west of South McAlester, but the old village has long since disappeared. On the spot where the young Shawnee buck sang his kiowala to his dusky maiden and courted his best girl by the light of the full moon only an occasional rock hearth and a few graves are left to indicate the former hunting grounds of the red man.

Near the old village site now lives a white man. Just on the border of this man's farm is a spot which seems to have been the thickest settled part of the Shawnee village, and here is a grove of black oak trees. In this grove are two very large post oak trees, one in the south and one in the north end of the grove. In the grove can be heard most any day the buzzing of a swarm of bees so plainly that the noise has fooled many old bee hunters, but all their search has never revealed a single bee.

Now comes the most peculiar part of this most peculiar tale. The large post oak tree standing at the north end of the grove is the curiosity of the bunch, for not long ago a young man, hearing of the bees, went to the spot and proceeded to look carefully up each tree in the grove until he came to the north tree. He was within two feet of this tree, looking up, when he heard a noise just like a carpenter at work nailing on boards, and the noise seemed to come from the tree. He went around it several times trying to locate the hammering, but it still seemed to come from the tree. The hammering continued until he happened to touch the tree with his hand, when it suddenly stopped. The man then went away amazed. A day or so afterward this man had occasion to again pass that way. He slipped up to the tree and listened for the hammering, and, sure enough, it was as plain as ever. He touched the tree with the end of his finger, and, as before, the noise stopped at once. This man and several others have tried touching the tree several times since, with the same result.

They say that the humming of bees and the curious hammering can be heard any day, but no one has been able to explain the mysteries of this enchanted grove.—Galveston News.

A Novel Advertisement.

A Russian shopkeeper with an eye to immediate returns is said to have posted an announcement to the effect that the reason he had hitherto sold so cheaply was that he was unmarried and did not need profit for the maintenance of a wife and family. The advertisement closed as follows:

"It is now my duty to inform the public that this advantage will shortly be withdrawn from them, as I am about to be married. They will therefore do well to make their purchases at once at the old rate."

The result was that there was such a run on the shop that in the course of a few days the shopkeeper had made enough money to pay the expenses of his wedding.—Argonaut.

Rhubarb as a Garden Crop.

One of the garden crops that thoroughly understands how to take care of itself is rhubarb. If planted in earth that is not very dry, it will continue for many years without receiving any particular attention. It is, however, very fond of high living, and those who desire to have large and succulent stalks should give a good top dressing of manure every season.—Meehan's Monthly.

BIG STEAMSHIP DEAL.

The Beaver Line Practically Sold to Elder, Dempster & Co.

Montreal, Dec. 29.—It has been reported for some days that the Beaver Line of steamers had been sold to Messrs. Elder, Dempster & Co. of Liverpool, but confirmation has so far been lacking. It was stated, however, yesterday by a gentleman just returned from Liverpool that the rumor is practically true, but with this difference: Messrs. Elder, Dempster & Co. and others have acquired the Beaver Line charter, with the intention of reorganizing the company. It will continue under the old name, but will be managed from Liverpool by Messrs. Elder, Dempster & Co., and the Montreal office will continue under the management of Mr. Campbell. The two offices here of Messrs. Elder, Dempster & Co. and the Beaver Line will be just as separate and distinct as hitherto. Four steamers are now in course of construction, and will have saloon accommodation for about 100 to 150 passengers, and good accommodation for intermediate and steerage passengers. The ships will not carry cattle, but will have a dead weight carrying capacity of 6,000 to 7,000 tons of cargo. The speed is to be 16 knots.

The Island of Guam.

Washington, D.C., Dec. 29.—The Island of Guam will probably be different from the other colonial possessions or dependencies of the United States in having a naval instead of a military governor. The reason is that the reason for the selection and acquirement of the island was to obtain a conveniently located naval station for American warships, and that being the case, the navy should have exclusive control. The command will be of importance, for the island has a population of more than 8,000 people, and so far from these being barbarous, about 1,400 of them are of European extraction.

The Winnipeg Bank Robbery.

Winnipeg, Dec. 29.—The discussion of the Molsons Bank robbery, which had almost ceased owing to the lack of material, has again become a theme of conversation through the action of the authorities in handing the case back to the city police after the Pinkertons had had it in charge for almost three months. The mystery which surrounds the whole affair is as impenetrable as it was in the beginning. The authorities of the bank have still hope of capturing the thief or thieves, as the reward of $10,000 now being offered plainly indicates. Facts that have recently come to light show that there is still much to be learned concerning the robbery.

IN PETERBOROUGH.

Mr. J. M. Donovan Tells how Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Him.

Peterborough, Dec. 26.—This town is famed throughout the Dominion as the most go-ahead, progressive, wealthy and up-to-date on the continent. This reputation is thoroughly deserved, and was earned by the quickness of the residents to see and to take advantage of a "good thing" when it comes our way.

One especially good thing that our people have benefitted by is the king of kidney cures—Dodd's Kidney Pills—a household remedy in Peterborough.

Among those cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills is Mr. J. M. Donovan, who reports that this remedy cured him completely of Urinary troubles, indicating the first stage of Diabetes.

Dodd's Kidney Pills are the only remedy that has ever been known to cure this disease. They never fail.

Not Good Enough For Her.

"Did you hear about Samuels?" asked Mrs. Graymare's husband.

"No, I didn't hear about Samuels," the lady answered. "When you have anything to tell, why don't you tell it?"

"Yes, dear. Well, Samuels was going home the other night when a footpad shot at him, and the ball hit a latchkey in Samuels' vest pocket, and his life was saved. So you see what good a latchkey is."

"Indeed! If Samuels had been going home at a reasonable hour, he wouldn't have met any footpad. Secondly, he carried $10,000 insurance, payable to his wife, and if it had not been for that key she would be a rich widow now. So if you are hunting around for a latchkey you will have to bring home some better story than that one. That's all. I'm going to bed now, and out goes the gas in two ticks. Latchkey indeed!"—Pick Me Up.

Roughing It.

On one occasion Archbishop Temple was welcomed and entertained overnight by a clergyman during the absence of that clergyman's wife. On leaving the host politely expressed the hope that when next his lordship honored the house Mrs. Temple would accompany him.

"No, thanks," the archbishop laconically replied; "Mrs. Temple doesn't like roughing it."

The clergyman's feelings were deeply hurt, for the visit had meant some expense and much anxiety to him. He unburdened his soul to his wife on her return.

"Why, my dear," she exclaimed, "you didn't surely put the bishop in the pink bedroom, did you?" He did.

"Oh, then, that's it! I put all the plate in the bed!"—London Outlook.

No Right to Ugliness.

The woman who is lovely in face, form and temper will always have friends, but one who would be attractive must keep her health. If she is weak, sickly and all run down, she will be nervous and irritable. If she has constipation or kidney trouble, her impure blood will cause pimples, blotches, skin eruptions and a wretched complexion. Electric Bitters is the best medicine in the world to regulate stomach, liver and kidneys and to purify the blood. It gives strong nerves, bright eyes, smooth, velvety skin, rich complexion. It makes a good looking, charming woman of a run-down invalid. Only 50 cents at any Drug Store.

HUMAN NATURE.

When a man has troubles, he increases them by being cross.

Some men, when they become prosperous, become impudent.

In addition to being fickle the average man is a liar and denies it.

An "unsatisfied longing" is usually nothing more than a desire to get something for nothing.

There is a certain kind of a boy who always looks for a rock when he gets mad, but he never throws it.

Druggists say that it is never difficult to sell a remedy for heart disease. Every one imagines that his heart is affected.

After a man prays, "Lead us not into temptation," he goes out looking for one to see if he is strong enough to resist it.

Always remember that if a man knows where you can make a dollar he will not tell you about it. He will go after it himself.

Some people are a good deal like the relay horses used in the pony express days. They don't actually carry a piece of gossip to its final destinaton, but they carry it to some one who does.—Atchison Globe.

Not Superstitious.

"Whose umbrella is that?" yelled the conductor as he entered the smoking car of a suburban train.

The timid little man started and was preparing to apologize for owning the cause of the trouble when the conductor again yelled almost in the same breath, "Put it down!"

The timid little man grasped the dripping umbrella, which he had spread in order to allow it the quicker to dry, and as he closed it with nervous haste the conductor continued:

"Don't you know enough not to open an umbrella in a house—in a car, I mean? Do you want to hoodoo this train? Well, it's mighty lucky you didn't run across a conductor that was superstitious, with that umbrella, or he might have put you off."

The timid little man stowed the dripping umbrella under the seat, watched the conductor punch his ticket, replaced it in a pocket where he wouldn't think to look for it in the morning and breathed a sigh of relief as the car door slammed after the presiding genius of the train.

"IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY."

To Wm. McCabe, Esq., Managing Director, North American Life Assurance Co., Toronto:

Dear Sir.—Your official notice came duly to hand, apprising me of the results obtainable upon my 15 year endowment Policy in your Company for $1,000 which matured on the 5th inst. Of the various options you have given me viz.:

Cash value	$1,564 96
Paid-up Policy, payable at my death, for	2,560 00
Yearly Income for life of—	166 20

I have decided upon the cash value; and it gives me pleasure to testify that, as I anticipated it would be when I took out the policy, IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY. This returns me the full premiums of the 15 years and over 4½ per cent. compound interest, in addition to which you have carried the risk upon my life. In view of the low ing rates of interest which have been obtainable during the latter portion of the period, it is difficult to see how this excellent result could have been surpassed.

Yours sincerely,

Permanent Cure of Boils.

B. B. B. Cured Mrs. Harrison Henley, of Musquodoboit, N.S., in 1895, and the Boils have never come back.

Anyone who has ever suffered from boils, knows how sick and miserable they make you feel.

When you think you're about cured of one, another seems ready to take its place and prolong your wretchedness.

Boils are simply the outcropping of impure blood.

When the blood is purified, cleansed and vitalized by Burdock Blood Bitters, the boils quickly disappear, never to return—the cure is permanent—your misery is at an end, and your health and strength come back again.

Such were the results in the case of Mrs. Henley, of Musquodoboit, N.S., who recently wrote the following letter:

"In the spring of 1895 I was continually troubled with boils, one coming after another for about six months. Some as large as a hen's egg.

"My blood was in a very bad condition and I was very miserable all summer.

"In September I got a bottle of B.B.B. and began taking it, I felt better after I took one bottle. I kept on taking the Bitters until I had taken five bottles and can say I have been well ever since and have never had a boil on me since.

"I can safely say from my own experience that B.B.B. is the very best medicine in existence for any blood disorder."

Mrs. Harrison Henley.

CHAPTER XVIII.

A STRANGE DEATH-BLOW.

Neil Bathurst released his hold so suddenly that the man tumbled from his chair to the floor.

"Good God!" he cried; "can this be true?"

"Yes, yes; true as truth, sir," replied the man, gathering himself up with sudden alacrity. "Don't fly at me again, sir."

This request was quite unnecessary. The detective was darting about the room, completing his toilet, with the rapidity that becomes second nature to men trained to be prepared always for emergencies.

"Start straight back, Peter," he said, without pausing in his work; it's useless for you to try to return with me, your wind is too short; I shall be at the house before you. Stay, where is it—which house?"

"The new one, sir."

"Good! Now then, out with you, Peter; I am ready to go."

In another instant they were outside, and the detective, without casting so much as a glance at Peter, hurried away, and in a trice was out of the old man's sight. Twenty minutes later and he stood surveying the wreck of the bridal feast, while Peter was still twenty minutes distant.

Almost at the moment of the detective's appearance on the scene, Mr. Hale had arrived, and pausing below for just a word, the two ascended the stairs and entered the room of horror. It was guarded by two policemen, and as Neil Bathurst appeared upon the threshold a piercing shriek rang through the room, and the mother of the murdered man rushed forward and flung herself upon him.

"Find her!" she cried, wildly. "Find her, and let us kill her as she killed him! You can! He said so! He said you were brave and wise!"

Like a flash there came to the remembrance of Neil Bathurst some words spoken by Clarence Arteveldt one day when they sat together at his mother's table. "Mother, if ever the time comes when you need the help of a detective, remember, Bathurst is the man to trust. What he can't accomplish, is impossible." They had laughed at the words then. But now the frenzied mother had conceived the idea that Neil Bathurst could somehow right this wrong; that nothing must be done without him. The man who had been deemed so wise and all-powerful by her son became endowed with superhuman capabilities in the eyes of the mother. Neil Bathurst was quick to comprehend this, and to understand that because of it he could have a strong influence upon the frantic woman.

"I will find her, Mrs. Arteveldt," he said, in a low, firm tone, and without in the least comprehending her full meaning. "If you will aid me by doing as I wish, I will be your helper."

"I will—I will!"

As she spoke, her head fell back, and Neil caught her in his arms. For the first time during that horrible hour she had passed in the presence of her murdered son, she had fainted.

"That's a mercy," said a little grey-faced man, coming forward. "It may be the saving of her reason; let's remove her to another room, quick."

They lifted her tenderly and bore her from the room, followed by Kate Seaton, and a female servant who had stood trembling in the background.

"I will return shortly, gentlemen," said Doctor Worthing, the little grey man; and then the lawyer and Neil were left with the two policemen, and the dead. Without addressing a word to them, Neil Bathurst stepped softly to the bedside and pulled back the silken curtains. Clarence Arteveldt was lying upon his side, with his face turned away from the gazer; the eyes were closed, the features calm, the attitude that of repose. One hand was underneath the head, the slender fingers thrust in among the rings of dark hair; it was his usual attitude when sleeping. Thus he had slumbered in boyhood, when his heart was free from the guileful passions, the deceitful and treacherous impulses that had woven for him his doom. Thus he had slept, when, in later years, his dreams had been of fair women, of past carousals, of the madness of the gaming table, and his cheeks had been flushed with wine. Thus, now, he was sleeping the sleep of death. The attitude was that of repose, but the face was not the face of a sleeper. There was that awful bluish tinge about the mouth, and just back of the temple a single clot of blood. The detective bent down and looked closely at this, and then recoiled with a cry of horror. That clot of blood marked the smallest of wounds, where some sharp, slender instrument had been driven deep, penetrating to the brain.

The lawyer, in his turn, bent above the body, and then the four men looked at each other in silence. Mr. Hale had been hastily summoned and knew as little concerning the tragedy as did the detective.

At length one of the policemen spoke.

"You are Neil Bathurst, the detective?" he asked, turning toward that young man, who nodded silently.

"Then you will be prime mover here; she, the old lady, has been taking on fearfully about you; she expects you to find the party that did this."

Even there the detective could feel annoyed; he had held himself, as much as possible, aloof from the members of the police force, and few of them knew him, save by name. "Bathurst, the detective," was often enough discussed at police headquarters, but he had scrupulously avoided giving them a sight of his face. The detective of fiction may stalk through the streets known of all men. The skilful and useful detective of reality conceals his identity as much as may be, knowing that to court publicity is to become a marked man, and to cripple his chances of success among the people, with whom he must necessarily deal "incog." He foresaw for himself a little too much publicity in this present case. But it was too late to amend that now. So after a moment's pause, he asked:—

"Is any one suspected?"

"Suspected! I should think so; why, it's a clear case," replied the officer.

"Who is it then, if the matter is certain?"

"I reckon it's certain enough; she ran away last night, and can't be found."

"What!" turning upon the man quickly; "do you mean his wife?"

"That's what I mean."

At this moment the little doctor bustled in.

"I take it that you are the detective, sir," he said, going straight up to Bathurst.

"Yes."

"Then I must tell you that much depends on you. Whatever you think, pray exert as soothing an influence as possible upon Mrs. Arteveldt; she has unbounded faith in you, and her grief has all turned into the, not uncommon, channel of revenge. If you do not assure her that you will find the murderess, and keep her assured of it, she may lose life or reason. On this subject she is already a monomaniac."

The little doctor paused as abruptly as he had begun, and then the detective who had listened soberly, turned toward Mr. Hale.

"If I understood the servant aright, you are Mrs. Arteveldt's lawyer, sir?"

"Yes, sir, I am her lawyer; my name is Hale," replied Mrs. Arteveldt's adviser, gravely.

"Then you are the one to take the lead here; all that comes within the scope of my profession I will readily undertake, both for his mother's sake," motioning toward the bed, "and for his own. What is known about this terrible affair?" turning again toward the officers.

"Not much," replied the spokesman, "except that all the servants and the rest agree that his wife killed him. There was some sort of a scene here last night before all the wedding guests, and in the excitement the bride disappeared. He," jerking his thumb toward the bed, "drank heavily, and went sort of wild. He made one of the servants lie down beside him, and when the fellow awoke this morning, his master lay just as he does now."

The detective pondered a moment, and then asked, "Has a coroner been summoned?"

"Yes," replied Dr. Worthing; "I sent for him just before you two arrived."

"Has anything been moved or disturbed in this room?" turning to the policeman.

"No, sir," replied the man; "I have looked out for that."

"Then, gentlemen, let us go into the next room; rather do you go, while I make a minute examination here, taking care to disturb nothing. Then we will try and arrange our ideas concerning this mystery; for it looks a mystery to me. We can do little more than this until after the inquest."

"I think I can give our ideas the right impetus," said Mr. Hale, as they turned to leave the room, in accordance with the request of the detective. "I was a witness to the strange scene of last night."

Bathurst nodded, and the four men filed from the room. Left alone, the detective examined everything within the room with the utmost care—but all to no purpose. There was not the slightest trace of anything that might be taken as a clue upon which to work, no sign to indicate how the destroyer entered that room, or departed from it. Standing beside the bed, he again gazed down upon the corpse.

"Arteveldt's wife was supposed to be merely a beautiful village girl," he mused, half aloud. "If this is true, she never struck that blow. No inexperienced hand could make its aim so unerring and deadly." So saying, he turned, and went softly out from the chamber of death.

On the threshold he met Kate Seaton.

"Will you please come to Mrs. Arteveldt, sir," she said, with half a sob. "We can do nothing with her, her nerves are in a most unnatural state. Pray use your will to quiet her."

CHAPTER XIX.

THE CORONER'S VERDICT.

That was a long, sad, wearisome day for the young detective. For two long hours he sat beside the couch of Mrs. Arteveldt, holding her hands, listening to her moans of anguish, that were alternated with fierce outcries for vengeance upon her son's murderer, soothing, persuading, and finally controlling. At last, having obtained from her a promise that she would remain quiet, and obey the doctor's orders, he arose to leave her.

"Remember," he said, as he stood beside the couch, "how necessary it is that you recover perfect self-control. If I go out upon this search you must be able to receive and understand my reports; remember I am serving under you. With the assistance of your lawyer, you should be able to help me by your advice and counsel. This is your search, you must not be wanting in strength to carry it on."

It was wonderful the effect his words had upon her. Wonderful to see the confidence she reposed in him, during this terrible trial. No other voice could calm her, no one else influence her in the least.

"I will be strong. I will not give up until she is found," she said. "Tell the doctor I will take what he pleases to give me."

This was indeed a concession, and Kate hastily summoned Doctor Worthing.

The detective now joined the lawyer, and from his lips obtained a concise account of the previous night. He listened in silence, and at the end of the narration, asked:—

"Will you tell me your exact impression at the time, Mr. Hale? When the bride was delivering her strange address how did you feel toward her?"

"To be honest, I felt as though she were speaking the truth, and I think this feeling was general; in fact, the countenance of the man, now dead, told its own story. I don't think anyone doubted that he had dealt unfairly by her."

Bathurst pondered in silence for a moment, and then said, "You are a lawyer. You understand human nature. Do you think this theory of the murder is the right one?"

"I don't see any grounds for a different, or a better one. The evidence is all against her."

"The evidence; yes, circumstantial evidence."

"True. And yet—her own words would convict her. You must consider she had matured her plans, weeks in advance, perhaps; see how suddenly and effectually she has disappeared. This thirst for revenge must have become a monomania with her."

"It is possible."

"But—you think it improbable?"

"No. It is the most probable of theories, and yet—I should be but a poor detective, did I allow myself to jump at once to the most probable conclusion. While there is room for a doubt, there is room for search in other directions. I have seen men pursued whose guilt looked still more probable, and because the easiest theory was adopted by all the actual criminal has escaped."

"Upon my word, young man, you are a sound reasoner. May I be allowed to ask what you intend to do?"

"Assuredly. I shall do nothing until the farce—beg pardon, I mean the inquest, is over. After that, you, being Mrs. Arteveldt's adviser, will of course examine my reports and be fully aware of my movements."

The lawyer made no answer, and appeared lost in thought. Presently the detective walked across the room, and, throwing himself down upon a couch, reviewed in his mind all that he had ever heard of Lenore Arteveldt. After all, it was very little. He had gathered from the ravings of Mrs. Arteveldt some idea of the first visit paid by that lady to Lenore, and of the effort made to induce the girl to renounce Clarence. If he could only get a fair, unprejudiced account of that interview! But that was impossible, at least for the present.

The Catarrh Clutch

This Disgusting Malady is at the Throat of 900 of every 1,000 of our Country's Population.

This Is Not Hearsay. It is Borne Out by Carefully Compiled Statistics of Diseases Most Prevalent. Its Development is Watched Carefully Because it is so Sure a forerunner of Consumption if Neglected. Most Catarrh Cures Contain Cocaine, which is a Dangerous Narcotic, and Prof. Heys, of the Ontario School of Chemistry and Pharmacy, says:—

"After an examination made from samples procured on the open market, I declare that there is no COCAINE contained in the preparation of Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure." Most astonishing results are daily coming into Dr. Chase's office of the cures made. Here are a few in condensed form. We ask you to call or write to the following parties if at all sceptical:

OSWALD BURKHARDT, 159 PORTLAND STREET, TORONTO, suffered from Catarrh for nine years, and was cured by Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure.

MR. J. PALMER, HAIR DRESSER, 673 QUEEN STREET WEST, TORONTO, could not sleep for years on account of the mucus dropping into the throat; cured by Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure.

MR. WHITCOMBE, OF THE METHODIST BOOK ROOM, TORONTO, suffered for two years; cured by one box of Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure.

MRS. COWLE, 467 QUEEN STREET EAST, TORONTO, thirteen years ago was attacked with Hay Fever. Never knew what it was to have any relief until she used Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. If anyone troubled with Catarrh calls on Mrs. Cowle she will give her endorsation as to her cure.

SPORTING PASTIMES.

Interesting Items of Local and General Interest.

HOCKEY.

The Aberdeens, of Ottawa, are evidently "all right" and a hot game may be expected here to-morrow night. On Wednesday they defeated the Orillias by 8 goals to 1, and on Thursday won a victory over Waterloo by 6 goals to 2. Concerning this latter match the Globe's Waterloo correspondent says:

The Aberdeens, of Ottawa, played an exhibition game of hockey here this evening with the Waterloo seven. Referee Tiffin from Waterloo called the game at 8 o'clock sharp. In the first half the playing was prettily evenly divided, although the Aberdeens scored 3 goals, and the home boys failed to score, their opponents' defence being impregnable. The second half resulted in three more goals for the boys from the capital, while Waterloo secured two. Both sevens played good, clean hockey; little or no roughness was noticed. The eastern boys certainly know how to handle a stick, and by their accurate shooting succeeded in giving the black and yellow their first defeat this season. Final score, 6 to 2, in favour of the Aberdeens of Ottawa. The teams were:

Aberdeens—Goal, Alex Pope; point, Harold Morton; cover point, E Butterworth; forwards, D Gilmour Max Rogers, M McGuire, N O'Connor.

Waterloo—Goal, Kohler; point, Forrester; cover point, Joe Seagram; forwards, E Seagram, Clemis, W Hendry and Lifton.

Lionel King, who is playing up west with a picked team from Toronto, will be home for the match. The local team will be composed as follows:

Goal—E Wasson; point, H Reynolds; cover point, A A Hollingshead; forwards, Lionel King, Roger Davidson, Bert Belleghem and W Crossley.

Arthur Farrell in passing through Toronto stated that "Phelan, for a heavy man, has wonderful speed and fits in well with the forward combination of the Berlin's."

ADVERTISING PONTON.

The Guelph Nationals are making the most out of the approaching Guelph-National Kingston-Frontenac exhibition match with Ponton as the chief attraction. Lurid red posters announce the coming of the ex-bank clerk of Napanee, thusly:

PONTON!

"BILLY" PONTON!

Twice tried before the Police Magistrate and recently at the Napanee Assizes for the Dominion Bank robbery, and now out on $10 000 bail, will play in the match on New Year's night, January 2, between the famous Nationals and the Kingston-Frontenacs, champions of Eastern Ontario. Ponton will be on the ice and will play point, etc., etc.

The Kingston Whig says: Frontenacs have a strong aggressive forward line that is as full of tricks as a dog's hind leg is crooked. The quartette can pass so fast that it is impossible to see the puck move. Their combination is more puzzling than that of the safe in the Dominion bank, Napanee.

CURLIANA.

Mr. Geo. H. Gooderham, of Toronto, who is bringing a big string of dogs to the Bench Show on January 11th and 12th, states that if arrangements can be made for a match he will bring two rinks down from the Toronto Granites on the 10th inst. Mr. Gooderham is a most enthusiastic curler, and is skipping one of the Granite Tankard rinks this season. Doubtless he will be accommodated with pleasure in his desire for a game.

The gauntlet which the Bankers so audaciously threw on the ice the other day, was picked up yesterday afternoon by two rinks representing the town, with the result that the challengers were beaten although they had two very strong rinks. The result was as follows:

The Town.	The Bankers.
C LeBrun,	W J Gravett,
Geo Giroux,	W D Parker,
W G Morrow,	A St A Smith,
W L Allen, sk.....15	H McHarrie, sk..... 4

Majority for the town nine shots.

In the evening Skip Allen and Skip Edwards played an inter-rink match, Skip Edwards winning by 14 shots, as follows:

W J Aylmer,	— Ritchie,
R Waddel,	H A Morrow,
G M Roger,	H McHarrie,
E B Edwards, sk...24	W L Allen, sk.....10

A scratch match resulted as follows:

THE TURF.

Tod Sloane, the American jockey in England, won in nearly half the races he rode in this year. No other noted jockey won one race in four.

The London Field attributes Sloane's success largely to his gentleness with horses. No man, the Field says, "can make a horse go faster than his best pace. The most he can do is to take care that no motion of his interferes with a horse's action, and to these facts we attribute Sloane's success."

There is a moral in that for more men than jockeys, surely. Gentle handling ought to accomplish more than bull-dozing in most things.

ICE RACES.

The twenty-second annual meeting of the Ottawa winter trotting club will take place on January 1st, continuing until February 3rd. Ten events in all are provided, with cash prizes aggregating $2,500. This meet is one of the biggest of its kind held in the east.

THE WHEEL.

The question of whether a bicycle is personal baggage, which some time ago engaged the attention of Canadian cyclists and railway companies, and the Dominion Parliament, has recently been discussed at length before the English Court of Queen's Bench. Lord Chief Justice Cockburn defined personal baggage as "whatever a passenger took with him, for his personal use or convenience, according to the habits or wants of the particular class to which he belonged, either with reference to his immediate necessities or the ultimate purpose of the journey." This seems a very large-hearted definition, but, according to the view of the court, it did not include bicycles. However, the question is to be fought out before the Appeal Court, whose decision will be looked for with interest.

OTONABEE.

Successful School Entertainment.

From Our Own Correspondent.

On Thursday afternoon, Dec. 22nd, in the 6th line school, Otonabee, the school term was brought to a close by a successful entertainment, attended by a number of the parents and friends, who were delighted with the songs, recitations and dialogues, which were cleverly given by the children of the school.

At the close of the entertainment the children were treated to candies and raisins, and an enjoyable time was spent in games and music.

The teacher, Miss Eva Carey, who has resigned her position as teacher in the school for the purpose of attending the Normal School, was presented with a number of valuable and useful gifts by her pupils, who expressed their regret at losing their teacher, who during her stay in Otonabee made many friends in the section.

THE NAVY SUPPLIES.

Admiralty Will Give Canadians a Chance to Tender.

THE STAMP SUPPLY RAN OUT.

Great Demand for the Canadian Imperial Penny Postage Stamps—Hon. Mr. Dobell Has Sailed for Canada—Canada Obtains a Greater Allotment of Space at Paris Than Expected.

London, Dec. 31.—The Colonial Office has transmitted to the high commissioner a letter from the Admiralty stating that it will be pleased to invite tenders for contracts for navy supplies from any Canadian firms of packers who may apply and prove their ability to carry out their contracts.

Mr. Chamberlain also writes to the commissioner that the British South Africa Company desires to arrange an exchange of mining publications with the Dominion Government.

Hon. Mr. Dobell sailed for home on Wednesday by the Majestic. He said that negotiations were not sufficiently advanced to enable him to make a public statement.

The supply of the new Canadian Imperial postage stamps obtained by the high commissioner for sale in England was exhausted on the first day they were offered for sale.

It is learned that the difficulties regarding space at the Paris exhibition in 1900 have been practically settled. Canada obtains a larger allotment than was at first expected, but not as much as was applied for.

INDIA'S WELCOME.

Lord and Lady Curzon Met With Royal Honors in India on Landing—Vice-Reine's Gorgeous Gowns.

Bombay, Dec. 31.—Baron Curzon of Kedleston, the new Viceroy of India, who arrived here Thursday from England, with Lady Curzon and their children, landed yesterday, the warships in port firing a royal salute.

The city was decorated with flags and Lord Curzon was received by the heads of the military, naval, ecclesiastical, legal and civil departments. An address of welcome was presented to the new Viceroy by the corporation of Bombay. It was enclosed in a silver casket of Indian workmanship, and expressed the keen and intense gratification experienced by all classes by his appointment.

Lord Curzon, replying, thanked those present for the gracious welcome extended to him and then his wife, who, he added, came to India with sympathies as warm as his own, and who looked forward with earnest delight to a life of happy labor in their midst. At the conclusion of the reception Lord and Lady Curzon were driven in an open landau to Government House, escorted by the Bombay Light Horse.

Immense crowds of people assembled in the native quarter. They were undemonstrative, but were evidently keenly interested.

Lord Sandhurst received Lord and Lady Curzon on the steps of Government House. The new Viceroy and Lady Curzon will start for Calcutta this evening.

Lady Curzon's Gorgeous Gowns.

Lady Curzon, the new vice-reine of India, brings with her some of the most magnificent gowns that have ever been seen in India. These dresses have been made by four of the leading costumers of the world, and have cost a small fortune. There are nearly 100 in all, and many of them are more splendid than those possessed by many a queen. One story is to the effect that when his appointment was decided upon the new Viceroy informed his beautiful wife that he wanted her to be the best-dressed woman that ever went out to India. Certain it is, that the dresses alone, exclusive of millinery and lingeries, represent between £10,000 and £12,000, and are the supreme effort of the best artists in London, Paris and Vienna.

KRUGER CALLS IT OFF.

Jameson Raid Anniversary Will Not Be Celebrated.

Pretoria, Dec. 31.—Strong representations have been made to President Kruger urging him to forbid the proposed celebration on Jan. 2 of the defeat of the Jameson raid, when, at the suggestion of the Pretoria Volkstein, the project was to burn Dr. Jameson in effigy.

Owing to the President's action the celebration has been abandoned. There is no doubt that such an observance of Jameson day as had been planned would have led to serious riots.

Post Explains Itself.

The Johannesburg correspondent of The Times says: "In yesterday's issue The Rand Post explains that its recent article denouncing the promoters of the mass meeting of Uitlanders held here on Sunday to protest against the murder of Edgar by a Boer policeman were written to prevent future trouble."

The Johannesburg correspondent of The Daily Mail says: "The Afrikanders here, who are mainly Government officials, formed a Republican Bund yesterday whose aim is to secure the protection of the Government."

DREYFUS TAKEN FROM PRISON.

The Prisoner of Devil's Island Said to Be on His Way Back to France.

Paramaribo, via Haiti, Dec. 31.—It is reported here that the former Captain Dreyfus, who for the last three years has been kept in solitary and close confinement on Devil's Island, one of the Isles de Salut, a few miles east of here, has been removed from his island prison to Cayenne, and sailed from there for France on Dec. 4 last on a convict transport.

No details regarding the departure of the prisoner or as to his ultimate destination can be ascertained. It is believed that he will be taken to Paris to await the orders of the Court of Cassation.

French Minister Denies the Story.

Paris, Dec. 31.—The Minister of the Colonies denies the report that Dreyfus has embarked from Cayenne on his return to France, adding that the Court of Cassation alone can decide the question of the return of the prisoner.

Even at Cost of a Revolution.

Paris, Dec. 31.—At a large meeting of the League of Patriots here yesterday, it was resolved to prevent the return of Dreyfus to France, even at the cost of revolution.

FRANCE IN CHINA.

The Tsung Li Yamen Favors It in Preference to Britain.

London, Dec. 31.—The Shanghai correspondent of The Times says: "It is officially asserted here that, in spite of the protests of Sir Claude Macdonald, the British minister at Pekin, China acceded to the demands for an extension of the exclusive French settlement in Shanghai. This result is due to pressure exercised at Pekin, and is likely to hamper the negotiations for an extension of cosmopolitan settlement, in regard to which the Viceroy of Nankin is disposed to meet the views of the British, American and German consuls.

"The Viceroy is greatly chagrined at the failure of Great Britain to support his determined policy in the Valley of the Yangtse Kiang at an important crisis. Satisfactory conclusions are not likely to result from British negotiations anywhere in China, so long as the personnel of the Tsung Li Yamen remains as now, actively hostile to British interests."

MANY BURGLARIES IN LONDON.

Out of 470 Cases the Police Get But One Clew.

London, Dec. 31.—The Christmas season generally produces an immense crop of burglaries in the London district. This year is no exception to the rule. A Scotland Yard official states that not less than 470 burglaries of minor character were committed during the Christmas holidays. All were practically of the same character, and with only one exception the burglars evaded the police and left behind no clue. The houses were nearly all entered while the occupants were away engaged in festivities, but as the victims belonged principally to the lower and middle classes, the cash value of the loot was not very great. Still, crime on so large a scale, committed with impunity, hardly speaks well for the diligence of the metropolitan police.

SHOCKING CRUELTY TO CHILDREN.

A Piteous Record for a Civilized Country.

London, Dec. 31.—Despite the efforts of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, child torture still remains one of the most characteristic English crimes. The extent to which it prevails is evidenced by this month's report of the society in question. During the last month, it seems, it has enquired into 3,785 complaints of neglect, starvation and other wrongs, and has found out of the lot 2,364 true cases. In these the welfare of 6,533 children was affected and 3,204 offenders were involved. This seems a piteous record for a civilized country.

Tumult in the Hungarian Diet.

Budapest, Dec. 31.—Indescribable confusion marked the closing scenes in the Lower Chamber of the Hungarian Diet yesterday. The National, People's and Independent parties protested against the constitutional conditions which they alleged would prevail by reason of the fact that the provisional Ausgleisch will lapse to-day.

Baron Banffy, the Premier, attempted to speak, but the tumult was so deafening that he could not be heard and it was necessary to suspend the sitting. When business was resumed the members of the Opposition gathered in the centre of the floor and kept up an incessant uproar. After repeated vain efforts, the Premier finally succeeded in speaking, and he concluded his statement by declaring that all responsibility of the situation rested upon those who had persistently obstructed public business.

Will Not Part With Canada.

London, Dec. 31.—The Evening Globe ridicules a statement made by The Toronto World to the effect that England, in order to gain the friendship of the United States, would part with Canada. No terms that could be offered, it declares, could persuade Britain to adopt such a course.

Sultan of Morocco Dying.

Moscow, Dec. 31.—Baron Schenck von Schweinsberg, German minister to Morocco, who is acting for Russia, wired Foreign Minister Mouravieff that Abdul el Aziz, the Sultan of Morocco, is sick, and that his physicians despair of his recovery. The Sultan, who is but 20 years old, succeeded his father, Muley Hassan, in 1894.

Dervishes Defeated.

London, Dec. 31.—Advices from Cairo yesterday say information has reached here that the Anglo-Egyptian troops under command of Colonel Lewis have defeated the Dervishes under Emir Fedil. Col. Lewis has been pursuing Fedil and his followers, who comprise remnants of the Dervish army, up the Blue Nile ever since the defeat and rout of the Khalifa at Omdurman. It is believed Fedil's defeat is the final stroke.

Papal Nuncio in Russia.

Vienna, Dec. 31.—It is predicted that a papal nunciature will shortly be established at St. Petersburg. The last representative of the apostolic chair at the Russian capital was Count Lilla Arezzo, whom the eccentric Czar Paul I. gave 24 hours to leave Russia.

ARE SIXTEEN PERSONS LOST?

British Steamer Glenavon, Hong Kong for London, Wrecked.

Hong Kong, Dec. 31.—The British steamer Glenavon of Glasgow, which sailed from this port for London yesterday, has been wrecked on a rock. The Glenavon after striking a rock headed for Hong Kong, but sank rapidly. Two of her boats arrived here and two are missing. Two steamers have been sent in search of them. It now develops that four passengers, the captain and 33 of the crew were saved. The Glenavon had a crew of 54 men all told.

Fast Electric Railway Service.

Berlin, Dec. 31.—The first "lightning" electric railway train in Europe has begun making regular trips between Crefeld and Dusseldorf. It made the first trip yesterday, 32 kilometers, in 30 minutes, or at the rate of about 27 miles an hour.

Eight Men Entombed.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Dec. 31.—Eight men were entombed by a cave-in in No. 8 shaft of the Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Company at Wanamie yesterday afternoon. After a heroic rescue five of the men were taken out alive. The other three are still shut in, but it is expected they will be reached in a few hours. There is more than a possibility that they may be alive.

Estate Goes With the Title.

Montreal, Dec. 31.—The will of the late Baron de Longueuil, who died suddenly in New York, will shortly be probated. The title goes to a half-brother of the deceased, Reginald de Longueuil, who is now in France; it then reverts to his eldest son, John de Longueuil, who, with his brother, is now attending school in the Island of Jersey. These boys will come to Canada in a year or so to attend the Kingston Military College. The estate of the family is entailed for three generations, and goes with the title.

Uncle Sam's Naval Shuffle.

New York, Dec. 31.—The Herald says Secretary Long has decided on the following assignments: Rear-Admiral Sampson, to retain command of the North Atlantic squadron; Commodore J. W. Philip, to command the Brooklyn navy yard; Commodore H. F. Picking, to command the Boston navy yard; Captain Louis Kempff, to command the naval station at Guam, and to be naval governor of that island; Rear-Admiral Schley and Rear-Admiral H. L. Howison, to be assigned to sea duty.

Sir Wilfrid Will Attend.

Montreal, Dec. 31.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier writes to the Club National that he will be present at the demonstration here on Tuesday evening and then he will be accompanied by Hon. Messrs. Tarte, Fielding and Sir Henri Joly.

Hon. Sidney Fisher will be banqueted at Waterloo Jan. 26, when, besides the guest of the evening, Hon. Messrs. Fielding, Tarte, Sifton and Paterson will be present.

His Death Was Accidental.

Sarnia, Ont., Dec. 31.—At the inquest held in connection with the death of James McMaster of Courtright it was found that he had met his death by being thrown from his carriage into a ditch.

Weak and Run Down, With Heart and Kidneys in Bad Condition—Restored by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I was very much run down, having been sick for several months. I had been trying different remedies which did me no good. I would have severe spells of coughing that would leave me prostrate. I was told that my lungs were affected, and my heart and kidneys were in a bad condition. In fact, it seemed as though every organ was out of order. I felt that something must be done and my brother advised me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I procured a bottle and began taking it. Before it was half gone I felt that it was helping me. I continued its use and it has made me a new woman. I cannot praise it too highly." MRS. SUMMERVILLE, 217 Ossington Avenue, Toronto, Ontario. Get only Hood's, because

HAPPY NEW YEAR.

How quickly the years roll on. Another twelvemonth has slipped by and we are standing on the threshold of a new year. Years may come and years may go, but the problem of life still remains—the duties of life press upon us with the old insistence and the duty of the hour confronts. Like St. Paul we must forget the past and look forward to the performance of the activities which our place in the world demands. The past is useful to recall the blessings and advantages we have enjoyed. We should forget our failures, only remembering them as beacon lights to guard us from future failures. We should forget our successes, for it is the rule of life that we can never succeed so far but there is left us other conquests to gain.

When we look over the past, individually, in a civic sense or nationally, we have just reasons for gratitude. We have had a year of great material prosperity in Peterborough. Trade has been brisk, the commercial clouds have rolled away and the sunshine of prosperity is beaming benignly upon us. It is so in the Dominion at large—trade has expanded, and all through our nation runs the thrill of new life. It would be wearisome to count all our advances, but among them are to be included an improved trade and closer relations with the mother land and the newer and closer relations to the great Empire, of which we form the most important colonial moiety. And these closer relations are all the more pleasant to contemplate when we reflect that to Canada, the elder sister of the colonial entourage of the mother islands, to a Canadian statesman is due the forging of the slender but potent new bond that has engirdled the empire. To Hon. Wm. Mulock, the Postmaster General of Canada, is due the chief credit of the persistent agitation that has effected the boon of Imperial penny postage.

Mr. Mulock's solicitude has not been for the Empire alone. He has just presented the Dominion with the boon of Canadian penny postage, a splendid New Year's gift—one that will materially help to increase the prosperity which the New Year so hopefully promises. It may at first seem a trifling matter—that of a cent reduction on every letter—but it is still a matter of great moment. The strength of the family bond is the ultimate condition of the power of the national bond, and anything that conduces to stengthening the former must have an influence all through. Freedom of communication and transportation are the essence of commercial prosperity and every influence, no matter how apparently trivial, is still an important contribution to the conditions that make a nation or country prosperous and great.

Peterborough, as has been said, has had a prosperous year; but that should not content our progressive spirit; it should act on our enterprise as the taste of blood acts on the tiger. We have done well as a town, but in the enterprise of our people, in the natural and acquired advantages for commercial activity we possess consist the elements of far greater prosperity and progress than we have yet gained. The beginning of a new year is a season of new and more robust resolves. Therefore, looking at the past and present, and hopefully to the future, we should reverently "thank God and take courage." It rests with the people of the town to greatly assist the progress we all so earnestly desire No doubt individual citizens will do their share in their several commercial and industrial spheres to promote the prosperity of the town. But upon the people at large depends the creation of the chief factor in our progress.

We must depend largely upon the incoming Council of the town for the progress and advancement which next year should bring us. It depends upon the sober judgment of the electors what shall be the character of our Council the coming year. While much depends upon the character of our council, that will depends upon the choice the people make. The best judgment of the people, separated from every influence of personal consideration, should be brought to bear upon the choice of Peterborough's Board of Aldermen for the year 1899. And if the people make wise selections we shall have a good council and any council will find its work cut out for it.

We have many matters to be dealt with, and wisdom and prudence will be needed. But if the town is to reach this position of importance, of which she possesses all the elements, there is a greater work than these mentioned, to do. It is admitted on every side, that, important as are our present possessions in the way of industrial establishments, as good and progressive as any in the Dominion, there is more to be desired. We can find no fault with the quality and character of our manufacturing establishments, but our great need is more of them, and getting more of them depends upon our incoming council very largely. We need a council that will do something to turn our advantages to account. We boast of our exceptional railway facilities; we boast of our water poper, unsurpassed by any town on the continent for extent, volume and accessibility. Its availibility is the one thing lacking. To boast of our water power available is the problem that the council must solve. If the town had water power, or its equivalent in electric power, which is dependent upon the former, we could at this moment have had a most important manufacturing industry established in the town. If the town had power to offer, the securing of manufacturing establishments would be wonderfully simplified. We shall look to our new council to settle this matter some way or other; and in view of the large things we shall expect from our new council, we, the people, should be exceedingly careful in the men we select next Monday. We shall expect them to settle the water power matter. We have millions of horse power rolling away in waste past our doors every year, while there are scores of factories in other towns struggling against adverse conditions in this respect, hungering and thirsting for this power, which the town should, under proper conditions, be in a position to offer them liberally. Of course this water power is not available for the purposes of the town in relation to manufactories. But we need a council that will secure this water power for the use of the town. It will be a difficult matter, perhaps, and that's the very reason we want a first-class business council. The other civic problems in relation to our streets are easy; they present no difficulty to councillors of ordinary business ability and energy, but the other problem needs exceptional ability, and we shall look to the council of 1899 to deal with the question and settle it—to secure and make available as a factor in the town's advancement the waste energy that is slipping past us every day. It may be a difficult thing to do but it must be done—if not one way, then another. It will rest with the council to find a way, and if supported by the public spirit of the citizens, with energy and determination the council can succeed. If they do this we shall get a new start on the highway to prosperity, and it will be no idle thing to wish the town and county and its people A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

USES OF PULP WOOD.

The New York Tribune says that so many things are made from wood pulp that the demand for the substance, constantly increasing, becomes practically limitless, and however ample the sources of supply may now seem to be they have a bound and tend to diminution, while the demand promises a constant increase.

"Printing paper alone eats an enormous hole in our national forests yearly, and the future extent of that requirement can only be conjectured. The huge procession of railway cars all over the country runs to some extent on paper wheels; carpenters are begining to use boards of paper handsomely veined, requiring no planing, twice as durable as the wooden variety and costing only half the money. The builder is introducing paper bricks showily enamelled, which will not burn, and possess many advantages over those of burnt clay. The shipbuilder introduces masts and spars of the same substance, which is likewise used for telegraph and telephone poles and flagstaffs. These are not fanciful experiments, but serious business procedures, justified by the superior utility of the articles so produced. The same quality is claimed for the paper horseshoe recently invented and now extensively used."

This is another lesson for Canada. We have the wood in abundance. The Tribune points out that the supply is limited and the demand increasing. If a "wood-pulp age" is coming we shall be in the front of the procession if we take care that our resources are not wasted, and that we build up our own industries instead of the industries of other people—Globe.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE grand Province of Ontario is still in its infancy—its chief commercial sustenance is milk. The value of Ontario's milk, represented by butter and cheese factories, amounted to over thirteen millions of dollars last year—about $7 for every man, woman and child. To this is to be added the value of millions of gallons used in other ways.

WE in Ontario have reason to be grateful to the patient and unassuming cow the Globe thinks. A bulletin issued by the Department of Agriculture shows that in the 116 cheese factories 1,435,937,916 pounds of milk were used, and 137,362,916 pounds of cheese were made. There were 66,104 patrons, and the value of cheese produced was $11,719,468. This is about $3,000,000 more than the amount for 1898. The amount paid to patrons for milk supplied was $9,709,004, as compared with $7,040,927 the previous year. The creameries show even a greater increase. The quantity of milk sent was 7,708,265 pounds and the value of the butter produced was $1,408,609. This is almost three times as much as was produced in 1893. A Danish gentleman who has been interviewed in Toronto, says that Denmark has no reason to fear Canadian competition in butter. Denmark deserves all the money and reputation it has won through butter, and has taught us some good lessons in the art. Consequently as one good turn deserves another, we advise Denmark to beware. We are coming up fast.

DEATH OF SENOR ROMERO.

Mexican Ambassador at Washington Did Not Survive the Surgical Operation for Appendicitis.

Washington, Dec. 31.—Ambassador Romero of Mexico died yesterday morning at 4 o'clock, aged 62 years. The remains will be taken to Mexico for interment.

On Wednesday last an operation for appendicitis was performed upon the ambassador, and although the operation was entirely successful, the resulting shock proved greater than he could bear.

Senor Romero probably was the best known member of the diplomatic corps in Washington, and was for some time its dean. When Great Britain raised her mission to an embassy, the added rank placed Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British Ambassador, at the head of the corps, though a junior in years of service to Senor Romero. The latter was raised only recently from the rank of Minister to that of Ambassador. He had represented Mexico ably at Washington for more than 20 years in all, and had served faithfully and well in other capacities at home.

Senor Romero was one of the most eminent statesmen, writers and diplomats of Mexico. He was born in the City of Oaxaca, Feb. 24, 1837. He had seen his native country steadily rise from a nation of revolutions and disorder to an honorable position among nations as a progressive, stable and prosperous republic. In much of this he had a share, serving twice as secretary of the treasury and once as Postmaster General.

Senor Romero married a Washington woman many years ago and their home was a social centre and the scene each season of brilliant society functions. Madame Romero died not long ago. The intimacy between Senor Romero and General Grant was especially close.

PAISLEY AMAZED

By the Extraordinary Statement of a Resident.

He Proves the Truth of His Claim—Says Dodd's Kidney Pills Absolutely Cure Diabetes—Gives Facts to Prove His Contention.

Paisley, Dec 30.—This most extraordinary and startling statement was made in public by one of our most widely known and prosperous men of business to day.

"I walk about protected from the attacks of Diabetes just as securely as a suit of steel would protect me from the stings of a mosquito."

"What do you mean?" asked one of his friends.

"I mean that I am as safe from the agonies of Diabetes, so long as I use Dodd's Kidney Pills, as I would be from the sting of a mosquito, if I wore garments made of steel."

"That is quite true," put in another gentleman who was standing close by. "Let me prove it to you by telling you of a case that occurred a few doors from my own house in this town.

"Mr. James Thompson, who is well known to most of us, suffered from an extreme case of diabetes for several years. He was so ill he could scarcely move. He tried nearly every remedy in the market without effect. Noticing an advertisement claiming that Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure Diabetes, he began using them. Two boxes made a marked improvement in his condition, and, continuing the use of the medicine, he was fully restored to health.

"Now when Dodd's Kidney Pills cured this case they will cure any other case of diabetes. I say this in all sincerity.

"If every person who is afflicted with Kidney Disease would use Dodd's Kidney Pills they would recover health and strength so quickly and completely that they would hardly know themselves."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cost only 50c a box at all druggists.

A NEW INVENTION
The Newcombe Piano Has It.

It consists of a Patented Practice CLAVIER or STOP which diminishes the tone when required and saves wear on the Piano; it also does away with the old way of having to press down the pedal with the foot in order to soften the tone when running the scales or practicing. Oftentimes the young pupil on the piano cannot press down on the pedal without throwing themselves out of the proper position when they should sit erect. This invention in the NEWCOMBE PIANO will enable children to begin two years earlier on the piano. In addition to the above, the NEWCOMBE PIANO is the finest made in Canada. Children often complain about practicing; they like it if they have a NEWCOMBE PIANO. 1898 styles are gems of art, containing every late improvement; they possess that beautiful full sweet tone which delights the singer, and so pleases every musical ear. Organs of every description at Wholesale Prices.

TWO MEN KILLED.

Four Others Injured by a Dynamite Explosion on the Soulanges Canal at Cats Cascades Point, Que.

Cotean du Lac, Que., Dec. 31.—A shocking accident occurred at Cats Cascades Point, on the Soulanges Canal works. A gang of blasters were at work on No. 1 section yesterday morning, and a series of dynamite cartridges were set off. It was thought all had exploded, but such was not the case, for no sooner had the men commenced drilling fresh holes than the crowbars struck a cartridge. The explosion which followed killed two drillers who were working at the particular spot. One, named J. Larocque, had his head blown completely off, while the other man, named Kelly, was instantly killed, and is very much mangled. Four Finlanders were injured, two of them seriously.

His Life was Saved.

Mr. J. E. Lilly, a prominent citizen of Hannibal Mo., lately had a wonderful liverance from a frightful death. In telling of it he says: "I was taken with Typhoid Fever, that ran into Pneumonia. My lungs became hardened. I was so weak I couldn't even sit up in bed. Nothing helped me. I expected to soon die of Consumption, when I heard of Dr. King's New Discovery. One bottle gave great relief. I continued to use it, and now am well and strong. I can't say too much in its praise." This marvellous medicine is the surest and quickest cure in the world for all Throat and Lung Trouble. 50 cents and $1.00, at any Drug Store; every bottle guaranteed.

THE DEAD.

Mr. C. E. St. Clair Simpson, accountant of the Canadian Bank of Commerce at St. Mary's, died there on Friday from pneumonia after a week's illness.

Captain Alexander Bowie of the Ottawa River Navigation Co, and one of the leading citizens in the capital, died on Friday from pneumonia. He was 65 years of age, and leaves a widow and four children.

Col. von Egidy, a retired officer of the Imperial army, is dead at Berlin. He was at the head of the German movement for the purification of the practical application of Christian doctrine, and was the founder of the "Socio-Christian" political party.

Rev. John Stewart, a retired Presbyterian clergyman, for years a resident of Kincardine, Ont., died suddenly on Thursday night, due to a chill taken while returning home after marrying a couple out in the country. He was born at Loch Gilphead, Scotland, 73 years ago.

Rev. David Mitchell, D.D., is dead at his home in Jersey City, N.J., from kidney disease. He was born at Glasgow, Scotland, in 1838, and graduated from the academic and theological departments of Glasgow University. He was pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church of Toronto and the Presbyterian Church in Bellville, Ont., and the Scotch Presbyterian Church in Jersey City.

DECLARED SISTO GOVERNOR.

They Also Refused to Recognize the Verbally Appointed Governor of the Americans—Rebel Governor Collected $6 Per Head Tax—Massacre of the Spanish Garrison at Panopi.

Manila, Dec. 31.—The British schooner Esmeralda, which has just arrived here from the Ladrone Islands, reports that after the United States cruiser Charleston left the Island of Guam in June last the Spaniards refused to recognize the authority of Francis Portusach, who was verbally authorized by Captain Glass to continue his former regime as Governor, and Jose Sisto, a former public administrator, was declared Governor. He armed part of the native guard, collected a tax of six dollars a head and secreted fifteen tons of powder and a small stock of ammunition when the island was taken by the Americans.

The schooner also reports the massacre of the Spanish garrison by the combined native forces at Panopi, Caroline Islands. Henry Naoti, an educated chief, has been selected to be the ruler. He is reported to be favorable to the Americans.

RUSSIA AND THE U.S.

The Big European Power Is Now Unfriendly to the Americans and Their Colonial and Canal Projects.

Paris, Dec. 31.—The New York Herald's European edition prints the following: Russia is evidently beginning a campaign against the Nicaragua Canal. The Novoe Vremya publishes an article, not only warmly advocating the Panama scheme, but filled with bitter dislike of the United States.

The writer says the predominance of the United States would have been desirable for Russia a few years ago, but all this has changed since the last war.

The writer goes on to say, having despoiled poor Spain, the United States have become a colonial party and an Asiatic power.

"Forgetting the Monroe doctrine of 'America for Americans,' which implies the other doctrine that American dominion must be confined to America, the Yankees," he says, "are now entering into open competition with us in China and Corea. They have no scruple over an alliance with their traditional enemy, England, and with Japan for this purpose.

"For this reason Russian financiers and diplomatists ought to give their support to the French undertaking when it comes to seriously discarding the neutralization of the Panama Canal and placing it under the control of the guarantee of the European and American powers."

The writer declares the Panama route would be more beneficial to Russia than the Nicaragua route.

"This latter canal," he adds, "even supposing its completion possible, would be a purely American undertaking, whereas the Panama Canal remains in the hands of our allies, the French, or it may become an international enterprise with the addition of a strong American element to the shareholders."

The Novoe Vremya says: "Russia must, therefore, be on her guard against the United States, especially in view of the enormous wealth of its Pacific shores and the strategical position occupied by Americans in the Sandwich, the Philippine, the Samoan and the Mariana Islands."

Preparing for Emergencies.

Moscow, Dec. 31.—In time of peace propositions and disarmament rescripts the Emperor is preparing for emergencies. The military budget this year will be stupendous, to judge by the increase in the salary of officers just announced. This increase will amount to not far from 11,000,000 roubles ($5,390,000).

CORRECTING HARDEN.

Filipino Junta at Hong Kong Reply to the U. S. Commissioner's Report.

Hong Kong, Dec. 31.—The Filipino Junta here, replying to the report of Commissioner Harden, who was sent to the Philippines by the Government of the United States to report upon the conditions there prevailing, asked the Associated Press to publish the following as "revealing the true situation and sentiments" in the Philippines:

"We deny that Aguinaldo will be satisfied if made a major-general in command of five native regiments and that if this is done the national army could be disarmed and disbanded.

"We repeat our appeal for an impartial enquiry by an able commissioner, and implore the American people to refrain from a hasty decision.

"The Filipino Government views with alarm Commissioner Harden's proposal to impose in America a high protective tariff against Philippine products.

"Iloilo surrendered to the national army, which is the completion of the occupation of the Island of Panay. There is no truth in the proposed establishment of an opposition republic in the Visayas. All the officials in the Visayas hold Aguinaldo's commission."

Anglo-American Privileges.

London, Dec. 31.—The Shanghai correspondent of The Daily Mail says: "The terms of the final contract respecting the concession to the Anglo-American syndicate of mining and railway privileges in the Province of Sze Chuen have been agreed upon, and are now being signed. Sze Chuen is undoubtedly the richest, as well as the largest, province in China. Great Britain and the United States get the greater portion, the Chinese and other nationalities getting the balance.

Havana Railway Franchise.

New York, Dec. 31.—The Havana City Railway Company has brought a suit against Juan M. Ceballos, Fred. H. Rohl, Francis Copia and the American Indies Company to compel them to turn over the franchises for constructing the street railway in Havana.

Don't Want the Monks.

Madrid, Dec. 31.—News has been received here from Manila that great commotion has been caused in Alaminos, a town of 4,000 inhabitants, in the Province of Laguna, east of Manila, by the rumor that all the Philippine monks intend to establish themselves there. The inhabitants protest against the monks settling there, and declare that there is no city in Luzon that will admit them without objection.

Cataloguing Havana Crooks.

Havana, Dec. 31.—Col. Moulton and Mr. McCullagh are quietly at work cataloguing American crooks now in the city preliminary to their arrest next week. Six men, thought to be notorious safe-breakers, arrived in Havana on the Mascotte yesterday. At Moulton's request they are being watched by the Spanish police. Detective Michael Crawley of New York will command the detective bureau.

Cubans Kicking Now.

New York, Dec. 31.—The Cuban delegation, according to a World Washington despatch, has prepared and sent to Cuba an elaborate appeal in circular form to be widely distributed among the natives. It begs them to remember that they fought for independence and not for annexation.

KINGSTON'S RECORD

For Producing Famous Men and Dodd's Kidney Pills Cures.

Kingston, Dec. 19th.—The Limestone City has given Canada a majority of her greatest and most famous men. Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Oliver Mowat, Sir Geo. Kirkpatrick, Sir Richard Cartwright, and many other notable personalities claim the city as their home.

Kingston is no less famous as the scene of many of the most wonderful and startling cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills, than for the first named reason.

Now another is added to this long list of cures. Mr. Robert Orr, Pine street, reports that after suffering for years with Bladder trouble, Dodd's Kidney Pills completely cured him, though all other remedies had failed. Every city has a similar experience. Dodd's Kidney Pills have cured every time.

TWO-CENT POSTAGE.

Text of the Proclamation Bringing It Into Force.

Ottawa, Dec. 31.—The proclamation which appears in to-day's Official Gazette announcing the reduction of the domestic letter rate from three to two cents recites the statutory authority for the change, and concludes with this declaration: "Now know ye that we do hereby and by virtue of the authority vested in us by the said Act and order-in-council proclaim and name the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine, as the day on which said section one of said Act shall come into force and effect, and do ordain and declare that on, from and after the said first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine, the postage rate payable on all letters originating in and transmitted by post for any distance in Canada for delivery in Canada shall be one uniform rate of two cents per ounce weight."

TO CHOKE THE ZIONIST MOVEMENT.

Turkish Government Determined to Prevent Jewish Colonization of Palestine.

Washington, Dec. 31.—The Department of State recently received from the United States minister at Constantinople, information that the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Turkey had informed him that the Turkish Government had no intention to prevent American citizens, whether Jews or Christian (coming as individuals and not en masse), from visiting Syria or Palestine as travellers or visitors, the only object of that Government being to prevent further colonization of Palestine by Jews, as the settlement there of religious bodies in preponderating numbers might lead to political complications, which it is the purpose of the Ottoman Empire to avoid.

The foregoing official announcement appears to have a direct bearing on the Zionist movement for the establishment of a Jewish nation in Palestine.

Freedom From Dyspepsia and Nervous Headache Ensured.

By the Use of Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets, the Only Positive Rational Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion and Similar Stomach Diseases.

Why should the merchant go to his store in the morning suffering the torments of a severe nervous headache?

There is no more need for him to do so than there is for him to walk through the drifted snow instead of on the bare sidewalk.

No man need suffer from nervous headache nowadays, unless he prefers to do so. For there is a means of cure, absolute, positive and permanent within the easy reach of every man, woman and child on the North American Continent.

Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets will positively cure the worst case of nervous headache, that can torture poor humanity.

Nervous headaches in nine hundred and ninety-nine of every thousand cases the result of starving the nerves.

The nerves starve because the supply of rich blood is not sufficient to nourish them.

The supply of rich blood is insufficient because all the food eaten is not digested, and converted into blood.

The food is not all digested, because the stomach is weak and unable to supply the juices needed to carry out the process of digestion.

Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets digest all the food eaten. This is converted into rich and nourishing blood, which strengthens and gives vitality to the nerves. When the nerves are healthy and strong you can never have nervous headache.

This, then, is why no person need suffer from this agonizing complaint. Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets cure it and keep it cured.

Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold by all druggists at fifty cents a box, six boxes $2.50, or sent on receipt of price by the Dodds Medicine Co., Limited, Toronto.

Robe Found.

The value of THE EXAMINER as an advertising medium is shown by the fact that through an advertisement of Mr. John Craig in its columns, a robe supposed to have been taken from the sheds of the Craig House, Lakefield, has been recovered. The missing robe had been lost. It was found by Mr. John Condon on the 6th line of Douro, and by him returned to the Craig House. The robe was not stolen or taken by mistake—it was lost by the owner. Accusations of theft or insinuations should be carefully made, especially in a case like this robe. All the occupants of the shed were respectable persons above paricining.

Essex Tobacco.

Mr. W. A. Shaw, the travelling agent for Ontario of the Newcombe Piano Company, has just returned from a trip in the west, and has left with the EXAMINER a few sample leaves of Essex County tobacco The raising of tobacco has become a staple industry with the Essex farmers, and Mr. Shaw says that every barn has its store of tobacco leaves as every barn in this section has its stock of hay. Essex tobacco is said to be of a good quality, though doubtless an experienced smoker's taste would have to be somewhat "acclimatised" to enjoy it fully. Mr. Shaw's duties taking him to every part of the province, makes it possible to bring his friends in Peterborough, which still remains his home, samples of the varied products of this great "Ontario of ours."

After Thoughts.

Christmas Day brings many surprises as well as after. thoughts, which it is never too late to recognize and respect.

We, ourselves, had large expectations, and they were fulfilled above our brightest hopes. We planned on a most unusual sale, but the Holiday Goods that remain tell better than anything else that our planning was none too liberal to justify the unusally liberal demands of the gift-giving season.

We are again ready for another week of big business but

Not For Profit.

This is the beginning of Clearing-up time in all the departments—a farewell to the passing year, with "LOW PRICES" hung up in each section. During the next five days will be the time to buy and extend your list of gifts.

—Bibles will be marked still closer to cost. The stock is too large and must be reduced.
—Teacher's Bibles, Pocket Bibles. Pulpit Bibles at a straight discount of 15 per cent.
—Fancy Goods of all kinds, 20 per cent discount.
—Dollar Toy Books for 80c.
—Sixty Cent Toy Books for 45c.
—Ten Cent Toy Books for 8c.
—Five Cent Toy Books for 5c.

—Games go at twenty-five per cent less.
—Table and Desk Ornaments at half price.
—Books of all kinds, in fancy bindings, and Picture Ornaments down to cost price.
—New Year's Cards at Cost Price.

Great Values . . .
All this Week.

* * * * * * *

To effect a Speedy Clearance of all our Holiday Goods, and in order to have nothing but CRISP NEW GOODS for next season's trade, we offer you some unusual inducements. Be quick if you would share in the savings.

Mussed Kerchiefs.

Several hundred Handkerchiefs that did service as holiday store decorations go on sale this morning at half-price and less. But what if they are creased and twisted and dusty? One laundering will set them right, and the saving in the prices will doubly repay that.

Brush Cases.

To bid what remains of this stock a quick good-bye, prices have been dropped to one-half and two-thirds off Saturday's figures. An opportunity for you to make a dollar do the service of two and three! We lose, and we don't Be quick.

Mantles or Jackets.

Call them by whatever name you like, they've got their marching orders. If half price will do it, they will find wearers before the week is over. We have still a very complete stock to choose from. The opportunity is yours.

Dress Goods.

We lose profits and more, too, but then the advantage of clearing up odds and ends is ours. Some unusual offerings this week in good solid plain Broadcloths, with all the prettiest and best sellers of the season among them, too. YOURS TO BENEFIT.

The Drawing Card.

No such opportunity has occurred for years to procure dress goods, staple dry goods and millinery of the same quality at such reasonable prices as that afforded by Messrs. R. H Kelle & Co's closing-out sale. In fact it is the "drawing card" of the season in this line. An imperative necessity exists for clearing the entire stock without delay on account of the firm deciding to retire from business. Cost price and even lower will not be a barrier to this sale. Holiday gift bargains is also stimulating this sale, and crowds of ladies find much that is appropriate for Christmas presents as well as regular wants. eodw

THE CIVIC ELECTIONS ON MONDAY.

On Monday, Jan. 2nd, 1899, the electors of Peterborough will be called upon to select from the thirteen bona fide candidates for aldermen offering, nine aldermen who with the mayor, will constitute the council for the year 1899. The number nine is determined, according to the terms of the new law, by the population of the town at the last Dominion census. The law provides for one alderman for each thousand of population. The population of the town in 1891 was 9,917, which is within 83 of the 10,000 mark, which would have given us ten aldermen. But now there are ONLY NINE ALDERMEN TO BE ELECTED, and here is the list from which the ratepayers will, on Monday, select their nine aldermen. The names are given in the order in which they appear on the official ballot paper, which is of portentious size—about 7x15 inches:

George Ball, merchant tailor.
Henry Best, merchant.
John Corkery, deputy postmaster.
Robert S. Davidson, merchant.
T. Henry G. Donne, merchant.
Edward H. D. Hall, barrister-at-law.
*James L. Hughes, contractor.
William Langford, contractor.
Noah T. LePlante, gentleman.
*W. H. Meldrum, miller.
J. Bannon McWilliams, Crown Timber Agent.
Robert Neill, merchant.
Charles B. Robertson, mechanic.
John Sawers, gentleman.
William H. White, mechanic.

It will be proper to inform the voter that the names on the above list with a star prefixed do not consider themselves candidates. Mr. Hughes resigned by card published in the newspapers, and Mr. Meldrum telegraphed his retirement to Town Clerk Armstrong, but as the resignations were not put in in the form and within the time prescribed by the statute, their names have, like that of Mr. Yelland, who retired from the mayoralty contest, to be placed upon the ballot sheet.

The ratepayers will have to exercise unusual care in voting on a ballot of so many names.

Every qualified ratepayer is entitled to put his or her X opposite any nine names on the ballot paper. That is, every elector can vote for nine candidates, the number to be elected. Any elector can vote for one candidate or any intermediate number up to nine, but no elector can put in two votes for one man.

Every elector can vote once for aldermen in every ward in which he is qualified to vote, but no elector can vote more than once for mayor.

In regard to the mayoralty vote, it will be perhaps unnecessary to remind the electors that notwithstanding Mr. Yelland's announced retirement from the contest, Mr. Davis will not be elected unless he receives a majority of the votes cast. As before stated, Mr. Yelland's name will appear upon the official ballot, and though he is not a candidate, according to his published announcement, yet there may be found a few thoughtless or determined electors who will mark their mayoralty ballot for Mr. Yelland. The friends of Mr. Davis will therefore make no mistake in marking their ballots for Mr. Davis, as usual.

All Young Men should attend the Y. M. C. A. Reception on Monday, Jan 2nd, 2 to 10 p m. Many attractions

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN

Having been nominated as a candidate for the office of Mayor and received promise of a hearty support, I felt it only due the wishes of my supporters to stay in the field and contest the issue to the end.

During the last few days I have been urged by personal friends to withdraw from the contest, and after consideration and in deference to their wishes and as I feel the weight of advancing years I have decided to retire. There is no doubt that my continuing in the field will place me in antagonism with friends within a public and private capacity, and this I sincerely wish to avoid.

I heartily thank all who offered me support and who would, I know, have worked untiringly to secure my return, and beg to subscribe myself,

Yours very respectfully,

WM. YELLAND.

TO THE ELECTORS
OF THE
Town of Peterborough.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:

Having been honoured with the nomination for Mayor for 1899, I respectfully solicit your votes and influence to elect me to that important and honourable office for a second term.

Besides the recognized practice in the past that the Chief Magistrate of the town should have a renewal of the confidence and support of the electors, I feel that my record during the past year entitles me to a continuance of the trust which you generously reposed in me a year ago.

During the past year I have spent a very large portion of my time and devoted my best energies to the advancement of the town and if again honoured with your support I shall continue to do my utmost to advance the material welfare of Peterborough by supporting as broad and liberal a policy in the management of its affairs as is consistent with the resources of the town and a reasonable rate of taxation, so that she may continue to keep her place among the foremost towns of the Dominion.

Wishing you a happy and prosperous year, I am

Your obedient servant,

A. L. DAVIS.

TO THE ELECTORS
—OF THE—
TOWN OF PETERBOROUGH.

Having been honored with the nomination for Alderman, I respectfully beg leave to solicit your votes and influence.

My views regarding the ownership of all public franchises are well known. I am strongly in favour of all municipal works, such as Light and Power Supplies, Water Works, Telephones, etc., being under the control of the town, and I will support any such measure having this object in view.

If you do me the honor of electing me, I pledge myself to use my best judgment in encouraging manufactures and everything else that will aid the growth and prosperity of the town. I will also be found supporting careful economy in civic expenditures, consistent with the efficient management of our town affairs.

Being a life-long advocate of the interests of the working man, I can confidently solicit their support, and pledge myself to stand up for their rights on every occasion.

As it will be impossible for me to personally wait upon all the electors before polling day, I take this opportunity of soliciting your support.

Yours truly,

GEO. BALL.

TO THE ELECTORS
—OF THE—
TOWN OF PETERBOROUGH

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—I find on further consideration that I don't want to be an Alderman this year. I therefore withdraw from the contest.

My thanks are due and are hereby tendered to the gentlemen who nominated me; also to all those who have offered to vote and work for my election.

Yours very respectfully,

J. L. HUGHES.

APPALLING DEATH

From Kidney Disease Prevented by Dodd's Kidney Pills, Only.

"Kidney Disease." Do you know what it means? It means that the kidneys are either rotten, or rotting; the blood is full of poisonous, death-dealing corruption; that the Kidneys can't do their work; that the victim is a walking charnel-house; that his hours are numbered; that the victim must take Dodd's Kidney Pills if he does not want to die.

Have you Kidney Disease? Is your skin hot and dry; memory failing; breath short; urine, reddish, or pale colored; does it scald when passing; is your appetite changeable; do your ankles swell; have you bitter taste in the mouth on getting up mornings; is there a brick-dust deposit in your urine?

Any of these signs is proof positive of Kidney Disease. Will you be cured, or will you die? Dodd's Kidney Pills are the only means on earth that will cure you. They never fail.

IN PETERBOROUGH.

Mr. J. M. Donovan Tells how Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Him.

Peterborough, Dec. 28.—This town is famed throughout the Dominion as the most go-ahead, progressive, wealthy and up-to-date on the continent. This reputation is thoroughly deserved, and was earned by the quickness of the residents to see and to take advantage of a "good thing" when it comes our way.

One especially good thing that our people have benefitted by is the king of kidney cures—Dodd's Kidney Pills—a household remedy in Peterborough.

Among those cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills is Mr. J. M. Donovan, who reports that this remedy cured him completely of Urinary troubles, indicating the first stage of Diabetes.

Dodd's Kidney Pills are the only remedy that has ever been known to cure this disease. They never fail.

"IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY."

To Wm. McCabe, Esq., Managing Director, North American Life Assurance Co., Toronto:

DEAR SIR.—Your official notice came duly to hand, apprising me of the results obtainable upon my 15 year endowment Policy in your Company for $1,000 which matured on the 5th inst. Of the various options you have given me viz.:

Cash value	$1,564 96
Paid-up Policy, payable at my death, for	2,560 00
Yearly Income for life of	166 20

I have decided upon the cash value; and it gives me pleasure to testify that, as I anticipated it would be when I took out the policy, IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY. This returns me the full premiums of the 15 years and over 4½ per cent. compound interest, in addition to which you have carried the risk upon my life. In view of the low interest rates of interest which have been obtainable during the latter portion of the period, it is difficult to see how this excellent result could have been surpassed.

Yours sincerely,

REDUCED TO A SHADOW.

A Fredericton Lady Tells of Her Sickness and Suffering and of Her Restoration to Health by Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

Messrs. T. MILBURN & Co., Toronto, Ont.

GENTLEMEN.—A year ago last September my health became much impaired, and I suffered intensely from prostration of the nerves, neuralgic headaches and general debility. The pains would shoot up my neck and down my arms producing numbness and a sensation as if my arms were frozen, so that I almost lost the use of them. My heart would flutter and palpitate; and sometimes I awakened up out of my sleep with a smothering feeling as though I was suffocating!

"Before taking Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills I was almost reduced to a shadow, and felt worn out, irritable, and melancholy. To add to my sufferings a partial paralysis set in, and, though I doctored a great deal, and took many medicines, I received no benefit. However, on trying Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, which I got through Mr. Geo. C. Hunt, our well-known druggist here, their curative powers manifested themselves almost immediately. I could feel every dose doing me good. They seemed to act upon the heart, and stimulate the circulation so that every tissue of my body received its due share of vigor and strength.

"The intense headaches with which I was so frequently afflicted have disappeared, and, instead of being weak, worn out and run down, I am now in my normal healthy condition.

"I give this testimony for the benefit of those suffering from similar troubles, so that they may know there is a remedy within their reach well worthy of a trial."

TWIN TORTURERS!

Lumbago and Rheumatism made Harmless by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Lumbago and Rheumatism cause endless pain and suffering. Every man and woman who runs chances of getting wet, or catching cold, is liable to suffer from one or both. Our hospitals are full of sufferers from these diseases; none are more painful. Every nerve is on fire; every joint is a centre of agony; every muscle an area of torture. To move hand or foot makes the victim shriek with agony.

Rheumatism makes more cripples than all the railroad accidents that ever happened. Twisted, mis-shapen caricatures of humanity, who cannot walk without misery, are to be seen every day. The kidneys are to blame. If they are healthy you needn't fear Rheumatism or Lumbago. Dodd's Kidney Pills keep the kidneys healthy and cure Rheumatism and Lumbago.

Dodd's Kidney Pills ALWAYS CURE.

A Woman's Crime.

A THRILLING STORY OF LOVE AND ADVENTURE.

By LAWRENCE M. LYNCH.

Author of "John Arthur's Ward," "The Diamond Coterie," "Against Odds," Etc., Etc.

"It seems as if Fate had been against my meeting that girl," he mused. "If I could have seen her, I should know how to judge her, perhaps. It's a match for Jocelyn's murder case; only I have not the advantage of the painted eye. Well, I must await the result of the inquest; then, if the destroyer of Clarence Arteveldt is to be found, I will hunt down her or him, as the case may be."

The inquest was of short duration; the evidence was unimpeachable and to the point, the jury unanimous in their decision. Mr. Hale and several others testified as to the supper-table scene, and there was not the slightest variation in their testimony. One after another they repeated the criminating words of the wronged bride: "This evening has witnessed your triumph; to-night and all the future shall witness mine. When to-morrow downs, let these your friends and guests say whether or no your wife has avenged herself."

John Riley, the body servant of the murdered man, described the scene in the bridal chamber, told how the victim had raved of his wife, how he had declared that she wanted to murder him, how he had laid down upon the bride's pillow, commanded the lights lowered and the curtains drawn close, and then compelled him (John) to lie down beside him; how Clarence had covered him carefully, and then laid himself down, saying, "I shall sleep now." "After that," testified John, "I fell asleep—I didn't mean to, but he had been fidgety all day, and I had been unusually worked; besides, it was long after midnight. I had not intended lying down, and the door was not locked. I didn't know any more until some one shook me and spoke in my ear. When I opened my eyes, Philip, the footman, was standing over me. He had promised to come in and relieve me before daylight, but he had gone to sleep, and overslept, too. I jumped up then, and drew back the curtains to take a look at my master——Gentlemen, he lay then just as you see him now, cold and dead. I don't remember any more, gentlemen—the thought that I had been lying there beside a corpse came over me like a flash; I sickened and fell down in a faint."

Th testimony of Philip, the footman, corroborated that of John Riley. Philip seemed to be a man of some nerve and sense.

"I was so shocked," he said, "that for a full five minutes I never stirred foot or hand; then I sort of came to my senses, and dragged John out into the hall, where I doused him with water, and left him lying there, while I ran to arouse all the servants. I sent one for policemen and, when they came, put two in this room; then I went for the doctor and Mr. Hale. If it hadn't been that I had served in Mrs. Arteveldt's house, I should not have known what to do or who to send after. I sent the coachman for the doctor and lawyer, and then I shook John into his senses, and sent him for Mrs. Arteveldt. You may say that was wrong, but I knew that she would never forgive any of us if we took a single step before sending for her. I made the women-servants keep downstairs, and kept everybody out of the house except the police. When Mrs. Arteveldt came, I obeyed her, and sent for Mr. Bathurst. I sent her coachman, and the old fool ran away on foot when he might have gone with the carriage in half the time."

After receiving all the testimony, the jury consulted for a short time, and then returned the verdict, fully expected by Bathurst:—"Deceased met his death at the hands of his wife, Lenore Armyn Arteveldt."

"There," he muttered, when at last the unpleasant ceremony was done, and the last juryman had vacated the premises. "Now I can begin."

He began by dropping his head upon his hands, and sitting thus for nearly an hour. Then he roused himself and drew forth a note-book, in which he made several entries. This done, he went down to the library, and summoned a servant. Philip, the footman, answered his ring.

"Come in, Philip," he said, affably. "You are a shrewd fellow. I want to ask you a question or two."

Philip bowed like a courtier and stood "at ease."

"I want you to describe to me this runaway bride. Can you tell me how she looked? I have never seen her."

"She looked like a picture, sir," replied Philip, with animation. "One would'nt ever suspect her of killing any one—at least not if they didn't see her as she looked that night. Then her eyes blazed enough to stab you through and through, and she looked as if she could be afraid of nothing. She was shortish, sir, and walked sort of graceful and swinging, but awful proud; stepped as if the ground was not quite good enough. The first time I saw her made me think of a story I read somewhere, about some great man spreading down his cloak for some queen to walk over. Well, she walked as if she had been used to stepping on great men's cloaks all her life. She didn't have much colour, only in her lips, and they were as red as could be, and just like a bow. Her hair was all full of ripples, and was a kind of yellowish red, and her eyes looked almost yellow, too, sometimes; clear, you know, like Mrs. Arteveldt's old amber wine. I am afraid I have not done her justice, sir. She was a regular beauty, and no mistake."

The detective could scarcely suppress a smile as he listened to this unique description.

"Thank you, Philip," he said, making an entry in his notebook. "Now then, who was the first to connect this lady with her husband's death?"

"Why, sir, now I think of it, nobody thought about who did it, until Mrs. Arteveldt came. She knew in an instant, and we all wondered at our stupidity in not thinking of it ourselves."

"To be sure," said the detective, with a queer intonation; "can you tell me precisely what your first thought was, when Mrs. Arteveldt accused her son's wife of the murder."

"Why, sir, as true as I live, I was shocked just for a minute. Then I saw the sense of the thing. It was no burglar, for nothing was stolen."

"Nothing was stolen, eh? Well now, Philip, you may send John Riley here."

Philip bowed himself out, and presently John Riley approached. The same questions were put to him, and, after him, to every servant in the house, in turn. As the detective dismissed them he charged each one to say nothing of his business with them, and then he sent to ask if Miss Kate Seaton could grant him an interview.

CHAPTER XX.

A LETTER IN THE GRATE.

In a very short time the door again opened, and Miss Seaton herself entered the room.

"I am so glad you sent for me, Mr. Bathurst," she said, coming straight toward him. "Mrs. Arteveldt is sleeping now, under the influence of Dr. Worthing's opiates. But when she wakens, I fancy it will be difficult for you to hold interviews with anyone, except in her presence. She has become possessed of the idea that she must have a hand in everything, and—I wanted to talk with you alone."

"I suppose you have me to thank for inspiring Mrs. Arteveldt with the idea that her aid is indispensable," replied the detective, bringing forward a chair, which she promptly accepted. "She must have something to keep her from going quite mad. Miss Seaton!" this with sudden surprise, "good heavens, how pale you look!"

"I have not closed my eyes since Lenore's strange flight, sir."

"What! you passed a sleepless night, and ever since have been by that poor woman, and in this house of horror. You will certainly be ill." He arose quickly and rang the bell. "Bring some wine for Miss Seaton," he said to the prompt Philip.

The wine was brought, and Miss Seaton drank it without so much as the ceremony of an objection.

"Now we will talk," said the detective, seating himself near her. "I want a little help from you, Miss Seaton."

The girl looked startled.

"Not—to hunt down Lenore?" she almost gasped.

"Not to hunt her down. You were her friend, I am told?"

"I am her friend, Mr. Bathurst. I wanted to talk with you about Lenore—and that shameful coroner's verdict. I want you to believe that Lenore Armyn is not a murderess."

"What! In the face of all the evidence? Do you believe her innocent?"

"In the face of all the evidence! In the face of everything. I do!" said Kate, excitedly.

"But—what of her words of last night, Miss Seaton?"

"Her words! I believe now that Lenore fully intended to run away on her bridal night. I believe that was the revenge she had planned, and that she alluded to. Now, when it is too late, I can recall many things that should have aroused my suspicions; but I tell you, that if Lenore is alive to-night, she is as ignorant of the truth concerning this murder, as you or I."

"If she is alive! You don't think she would take her own life?"

"I don't know. I can see now how worthless life must have seemed to her. I can conceive how she might throw away her own existence, but not that she could rob another of his."

"That is to say, you can imagine yourself, under similar circumstances, taking refuge in a suicide's grave. Women invariably judge others of their own sex by themselves."

Kate Seaton coloured.

"I have not been able to gain much of an idea of Mrs. Lenore Arteveldt," went on the detective, "but from what I have heard I should say that she was not the person to destroy herself;" (then, in a lower and more earnest tone) "Miss Seaton, I sent for you this evening to ask for information concerning her. I was not aware that you were so firmly her friend, or that you doubted her guilt. As for me, my first task is to find her, my next to prove her guilty or innocent. Rest assured that if she be innocent, she shall never suffer at my hands. I want to get a correct idea of her, and depend on your memory to aid me. Will you tell me, as briefly as you can, all that you can recall of your friend since first you knew her?"

"Yes," replied she, "for by so doing I shall help, not damage her cause."

Beginning at the time when she had first known Lenore, at the young ladies' school, Kate related reminiscence after reminiscence of the beautiful fugitive; told of her beauty, her brilliancy, her wit, her affectionateness, her impulsive generosity. She dwelt upon Lenore's fierce hatred of shams and deceit, of trickery, treachery, and all manner of petty meanness; told how she was ever the champion of the right, and the oppressed; of the weak, and those mentally deficient. Suddenly she paused: in telling of Lenore's championship she must needs say too much concerning the fierce, fiery temper, perhaps indirectly she had already said too much. She reflected for a moment, for in espousing the cause of her friend little Kate Seaton was becoming wise as a serpent. The detective, who had been making notes from time to time, looked up as she ceased speaking, but did not urge her to proceed, seeming, like herself, to be occupied with his own thoughts. At last Kate looked up.

"I suppose you are beginning a systematic investigation?" she said, seriously.

"Yes."

"And—will you question others beside me concerning Lenore?"

The detective began to see her drift. "Assuredly," he said. "I begin with you, because I wanted some information from those not prejudiced against her. I shall eventually have to interview those who will picture her in a more lurid light."

"You—you intend to talk with Mrs. Warren—and Miss VanBuren?"

"The woman she denounced as accomplices with Arteveldt?"

"Yes."

"I shall see them, of course."

"Then I may as well forestall them; they will put poor Lenore's faults into the worst dress possible," and she hastened to give a full account of Lenore's attack upon the German wife-beater.

The detectice listened with keen interest. "What!" he exclaimed, "did she actually strike the man down?"

"She actually did, and he certainly deserved it. I have told you this because I know they will make capital of Lenore's furious temper, and use it against her. Jess Warren ran screaming home, and told my sister that the police had arrested Lenore. We got there just in time to hear her, and Lenore, who was trembling with anger, said some very cutting things to Jess. I think that was the foundation of Jess Warren's hatred for her. Now, let me tell you all I know concerning the inveigling of poor Lenore into a gambler's den," and she hurriedly related the little that she knew concerning that shameful plot, together with the suspicions, amounting almost to certainties, that were the natural result of Lenore's spirited denunciation of the previous evening.

"I never really liked, or trusted Mrs. Warren," she concluded. "And my aversion for Miss VanBuren was second only to Lenore's dislike for her. Let me suggest, Mr. Bathurst, that you do not lose too much time, if you are determined to see Jess. I am very much mistaken in my brother-in-law if he allows her to remain under his roof."

"I shall certainly lose no time," replied he, smiling a little; "and now, will you favour me with a description of the person of this mysterious bride?"

Kate gave him a vivid, glowing, thoroughly womanly word picture of Lenore; and then the detective said:—

"Thank you, Miss Seaton; I will detain you no longer. By the way, can you tell me if the bachelor effects of the deceased are still in his old room at his mother's house?"

"They are, I believe. He had not ordered the removal of anything except his wardrobe."

"Well, I must visit that room to-night."

"To-night?"

"Yes. It is now seven o-clock; I must run out for a few moments, meantime, may I depend upon you to speak to Mr. Hale when he comes? If I have not returned by that time, ask him to get the necessary keys, and, if possible, without disturbing Mrs. Arteveldt. And to-night you must rest, even if I have to take your place at the bedside."

"You? But you are worn out like myself."

"Nonsense! I slept last night, remember. Besides, I am trained to endure loss of sleep."

"It's and odd position for a detective," said Kate, wearily. "But I may have to take you at your word. If she does not waken much calmer, the others would find her unmanageable."

"I'm a capital nurse," smiled the detective. "Trust me, you shall rest to-night; and now, I will go, and you shall lie in wait for Mr. Hale."

A few more words, and then they separated. Kate going back to her charge, with weary limbs, aching head, and a sad heart: and Nell Bathurst hastening toward his own apartments, where, if he did not find him already there, he must leave a message for Jocelyn.

(To be continued.)

Women's Worst Enemy

Some hesitate before giving an answer, but those who know best will immediately say HEADACHE.

Thousands of women live in misery day after day, and week after week, suffering untold agony from these dreadful headaches. Husbands are disheartened, children neglected, and happy homes ruined. Most women strive to bear in patience the suffering which they consider part of life without looking into the cause or searching for relief. Food cannot digest without the bile which the liver supplies and hence the necessity of keeping the liver in good working order. To cure the headaches you must cure the liver and thus remove the cause of disease.

Dr. Chase spent years of his life in perfecting a medicine which acts directly on the kidneys and liver. Thousands of grateful women have testified during the past ten years to the effectiveness of this remedy for sick headaches. Many a home has been restored to happiness as a result.

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, the greatest discovery of this great scientist, are put up to sell at 25 doses for 25c. All dealers.

ASSESSMENT SYSTEM.

A SAD HOME

The home is sad, the flags are at half-mast. A good man has gone to his long home. Was he wise as well as good? That question is answered by the amount of his insurance. If he had a policy in the for $500, $1000, $1500 or $2000 his widow and children or relations are sure of that amount, debt-free and absolute. And the price of protection is so cheap in this best of Canadian Societies that one never misses the little money that makes the loved ones safe.

DISASTROUS FIRES.

Destroying Agent Visits Port Dalhousie and Kingston.

MAINSTAY OF THE VILLAGE GONE

The Cathedral at Kingston Goes Up in Smoke—At the Port 250 Hands Were Thrown Out of Employment—In Both Cases the Money Loss Will Aggregate $100,000.

St. Catharines, Jan. 3.—Just about 9 o'clock yesterday morning fire broke out in the boiler room of the Toronto Rubber Shoe Manufacturing Company's works at Port Dalhousie. Every effort was made to stop the fire, but this could not be done, so then the efforts of the employes were directed to preventing the spread of the flames to the main building. For a time it looked as if their efforts would be successful, but the fire communicated with the varnish room, and then it was all over. The flames spread with fierce rapidity, and it was soon the building was doomed.

Efforts were directed towards saving the manufactured stock in the building, and much of this was got out, though all the goods in process of manufacture were destroyed.

A strong wind was blowing, and fanned the flame to fierce heat, and the quantity of oils, naptha, etc., augmented the fury of the fire. The flames communicated with the Wood grist mill, and this was totally destroyed, in addition to the oil house of the rubber factory across the road. All the hands were at work when the fire broke out. No one was hurt seriously, though William Crawford badly sprained his ankles by jumping from a window.

What was in the morning a fine building and a hive of industry, was last night a smouldering mass of ruins.

About 250 hands are thrown out of employment.

All Port Dalhousie laments the burning of the works, for they were looked upon as the mainstay of the place. The insurance is not yet known.

The Losses and Insurance.

The grist mill was insured in the Hartford and Western for $2,500 each. The contents of the mill were not insured. The rubber factory loss will amount to over $100,000, they having lost over $50,000 on rubber alone. Toronto companies are interested in the rubber factory loss, but to what extent Manager Foote could not say at present, as their policies are reported in their Toronto office.

CATHEDRAL BURNED.

The Kingston Edifice a Mass of Ruins—History of the Building—Casualties at the Fire.

Kingston, Ont., Jan. 3.—St. George's Cathedral was burned down on Sunday morning. The fire was discovered about 5 o'clock, and in a few hours the fine building was a mass of ruins, the interior being completely gutted. The fire is supposed to have started from an explosion of gas in the furnace room. Half an hour before the alarm was given, Sexton Bowen had visited the church, fixed the fires, and left for his quarters. Firemen, policemen, soldiers and citizens worked hard in weather 12 degrees below zero, and all were soon coated with ice. When the roof and dome fell in the shower of flying pieces spread fire along King street doing special damage to the residences of Very Rev. Dean Smith and George H. Allen. Both homes were flooded before the fires in the rooms were stayed.

The cathedral was built in 1825, and remodelled in 1840 and 1893. It is probable that $100,000 had been expended upon it. The church officials carried a debt of $30,000. The insurance was $35,000 on building and contents, carried by the Sun, Lancashire, Northern, Alliance and Gore Mutual companies. Little was saved. Dean and Mrs. Smith secured a portion of the church records and vestments from a vestry.

MONDAY'S MUNICIPAL CONTEST.

The First New Style Aldermanic Election.

A. L. DAVIS RE-ELECTED MAYOR.

The Board of Aldermen for the Year 1899.

THE NEW WAY WORKS WELL.

Four Old Councillors Become Aldermen—Five New Members Returned—Details of the Voting—Other Municipal Returns—County and Township Councillors Elected.

The first election held under the new system of municipal representation, whereby wards are abolished for purposes of representation, aldermen elected by the general vote in the same manner as mayor, and the members of the council reduced in number from twelve to nine, took place yesterday. Though the elections were not productive of much excitement, there was no lack of interest. At this early hour it is difficult to decide whether there was a very large vote. The absence of a contest for the mayoralty failed to furnish the usual data for determining the size of the vote. Besides the vote is so split up among the fifteen names on the ballot paper that the total is difficult to arrive at.

The new system worked well in result at the first attempt, inasmuch as many objectors believed that there would be a great deal of ward favouritism shown to candidates, that is that electors would favour the candidates residing in their wards. But such was not the case. The vote given the successful candidates was generally pretty evenly distributed, though where there was a larger vote in case of a resident candidate it was perhaps due to the name of the candidate being well known as distinguished from the host of other names on the list. There was a general absence of "plumping" which speaks well for the desire of the electors to select the best men in their opinion, independently of considerations of ward divisions.

There are, however, several improvements that can be effected at subsequent elections. The electors, not being accustomed to handling so large a list of candidates, were necessarily slow in selecting the nine names from which they were entitled to vote. If not in contravention of the law, the town might print sheets containing the names of bona fide candidates, and have them posted some days before the day of polling. The electors would then be able to study the list and make their selections, and less time would be consumed in marking the ballots in the booths.

Another improvement would be, perhaps, an increase of the number of polling booths. This would not only facilitate the reception of votes, but would also facilitate the counting of the votes, so that the public could be put into possession of the returns at an early hour, without waiting, as they had to do last night, till nearly 1 o'clock for the complete returns. Yesterday being a holiday, the voting was conducted under exceptional conditions. It was a day off, and electors had abundant leisure, so that waiting at a booth for a chance to vote was not a serious matter. But voting on an ordinary working day would be conducted under difficulties, for at the noon hour there would be a rush that would be difficult to handle, with the possibility of many having to retire without a chance of putting in their votes. This would to a large extent be obviated by the adoption of the suggestions made above: of displaying a posted list of bona fide candidates, and increasing the number of polling booths. With any voting system the interests of fair representation demand that there be the greatest possible facilities for recording the popular vote.

Another point in favour of the new system, involving so lengthy a ballot, was that, contrary to the fears of many, there were very few spoiled ballots, no more than at any ordinary election under the old system. The new system presents a condition which meets the views of a large class of citizens, a pretty large absence of the usual persistent canvassing. Many of the candidates did no canvassing at all, and few did any of any account. Thus the council selected was the deliberate choice of the electors, without being largely influenced by undue personal appeals or pressure.

The voting in the several wards by persons so qualified did not appear to be very objectionable, though there were a few that complained of it.

The wisdom of having the names of only bona fide candidates printed and posted is shown by the fact that despite of the withdrawal of Mr. Yelland as a mayoralty candidate and of Messrs. Meldrum and Hughes as aldermanic candidates, there was 376 votes polled for Mr. Yelland and 180 and 105 for Mr. Meldrum and Mr. Hughes respectively.

In the case of aldermen especially there was a waste of votes. In these two cases there was a loss of 285 votes, which if they had been distributed amongst bona fide candidates, would have affected the result.

Of course the vote in the case of the mayoralty was a mere formality, Mr. Yelland having formally withdrawn on the Friday previous to the polling.

The council will be composed as follows:

MAYOR—A. L. Davis.

ALDERMEN (in order of majority)—J. B. McWilliams, R. S. Davidson, T. H. G. Denne, E. H. D. Hall, John Corkery, R. Neill, Wm. Lasgford, Henry Best and John Sawers.

Ashburnham.

The election in the village excited considerable interest, the addition of water works adding to the dignity of the corporation, with a corresponding increase in the honour of being a representative. This is the result:

FACTS ABOUT HEALTH

It is Easy to Keep Well if We Know How—Some of the Conditions Necessary to Perfect Health.

The importance of maintaining good health is easily understood, and it is really a simple matter if we take a correct view of the conditions required. In perfect health the stomach promptly digests food, and thus prepares nourishment. The blood is employed to carry this nourishment to the organs, nerves, muscles and tissues which need it. The first great essential for good health, therefore, is pure, rich blood. Now it is certainly a fact that no medicine has such a record of cures as Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is literally true that there are hundreds of people alive and well today who would have been in their graves had they not taken Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is depended upon as a family medicine and general regulator of the system by tens of thousands of people. This is because Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the blood pure. This is the secret of its great success. Keep your system in good health by keeping your blood pure with Hood's Sarsaparilla, which absolutely cures when other medicines fail to do any good whatever.

Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Mr. J. M. Donovan Tells how Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Him.

Peterborough, Dec. 26.—This town is famed throughout the Dominion as the most go-ahead, progressive, wealthy and up-to-date on the continent. This reputation is thoroughly deserved, and was earned by the quickness of the residents to see and to take advantage of a "good thing" when it comes our way.

One especially good thing that our people have benefitted by is the king of kidney cures—Dodd's Kidney Pills—a household remedy in Peterborough.

Among those cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills is Mr. J. M. Donovan, who reports that this remedy cured him completely of Urinary troubles, indicating the first stage of Diabetes.

Dodd's Kidney Pills are the only remedy that has ever been known to cure this disease. They never fail.

Milburn's Rheumatic Pills are the only reliable and satisfactory remedy for Rheumatism, Sciatica, Lumbago, Gout and Neuralgia. Price 50c., all druggists.

IS HE A HERETIC?

Teaching and Preaching of Dr. Workman to be Investigated.

The following notice has been issued in the Christian Guardian:

At the sessions of the Bay of Quinte Conference held in Lindsay in June, 1898, the following resolution was passed:—"That whereas many persons have affirmed and many others have believed that the teaching and preaching of the Rev. George C. Workman, Ph.D., are not in harmony with our doctrinal standards, therefore at the request of Dr. Workman, with a view to justice to our brother and to the satisfaction of the mind of the church, it is hereby resolved that the following be appointed a committee to call for evidence and to investigate the questions raised and to report their findings to the next Conference:—Revs W R Young, S J Shorey, W J Crocker, Thomas Manning, W P Dyer, O R Lambly and W J Jolliffe."

For the purposes set forth in the above resolution, the committee therein named will meet in the Board Room, Wesley Buildings, Toronto, on Tuesday, February 14, 1899 at 10 o'clock in the forenoon.

Notice is hereby given that any person or persons having charges or complaints or matters to allege against the teaching or preaching of the said Rev. Geo. Workman, Ph D., are requested to send copies of the same to Rev. W R Young, Port Hope, chairman of the said committee, on or before January 31, 1899.

AFTER MANY YEARS

Of Suffering From Gravel, Mr. J. N. Babcock Recovers.

Thanks to Dodd's Kidney Pills Which Cured Him Speedily and Thoroughly Mr. Babcock's Story in his Own Emphatic Words.

Sharbot Lake, Jan. 2.—A Dresden despatch, to the Canadian press last week, described how ex-reeve W. G. Cragg, of that town, was cured of severe Inflammatory Rheumatism by Dodd's Kidney Pills, after the best doctors had failed to benefit him, and after many so-called "remedies" had proved utterly useless.

The story has been the subject of a great deal of interested discussion here, and it has been ascertained that Dodd's Kidney Pills are an article in universal use in this district.

"Mr. Cragg cannot tell me anything about Dodd's Kidney Pills that I do not know already," said a well-known lawyer who was discussing the matter with a group of friends yesterday. "I have known them to cure cases of Rheumatism which six doctors had pronounced incurable."

"I have experienced what Dodd's Kidney Pills will do," said Mr. John Nicholas Babcock, another well known resident. "I have suffered the most acute tortures from Gravel and other Kidney Diseases, for twenty long years. I spent hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills, and for various so called cures, but with no lasting benefit. "I didn't believe Dodd's Kidney Pills would cure me, but expected to get a little temporary relief from their use. I was completely and thoroughly cured by them though. There is no Kidney medicine on earth to compare with Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Scores of people in this district testify gratefully to the wonderful power and virtue of Dodd's Kidney Pills. Every phase of Kidney Disease, including Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Rheumatism, Gout, Impure Blood, Heart Failure, Paralysis, Dropsy, Sciatica, Lumbago, Gravel, Stone in the Bladder, and Women's Troubles, yield, positively and speedily, to the power of this great Life Saver.

THEY ARE ANXIOUS.

Americans at Washington Hardly Know What to Fear or Hope for at Philippine Ilcilo.

Washington, Jan. 3.—Nothing more has been heard at the War Department from Gen. Otis at Manila. The situation is irritating in the fact that, according to the experience of the last few days, it is not to be expected that anything more can be heard from Iloilo for a day or two at least, except in the very improbable event that the American force has been repulsed in their efforts to make a landing, and have been forced to return straight to Manila. It is surmised from the reports that Gen. Miller is proceeding with more tact and with less roughness in his dealings with the insurgents than appeared from a first impression of the reports. His purpose, apparently, was to avoid such a formal recognition of the insurgents as might tend to embarrass the United States Government hereafter, but at the same time, not to deal harshly with them if they were brought to see the rectitude of his decisions. Therefore, the officials are of the opinion there will be no actual hostilities between the forces arrayed against Gen. Otis and his own, but that, at the worst, the former will retire from the city without accepting or rejecting the American overtures until they have heard from Aguinaldo. Gen. Otis has taken steps to acquaint Gen. Miller with the very latest instructions from the President, and a special messenger is now on his way from Manila to Iloilo. Although officials profess the strong belief that no serious trouble will occur, they have taken the precaution to expedite the despatch of military reinforcements to Gen. Otis' command in the Philippines.

Aguinaldo Losing His Grip.

Madrid, Jan. 3.—Philippine advices received by the Government report that the release of the Spanish prisoners, which was expected a day or two ago, is now prevented by the rivalry of the native politicians. Gen. Aguinaldo, it is reported, is rapidly losing all authority in the Filipino councils.

What She Believes.

"I believe Hood's Sarsaparilla is a good medicine, because I have seen its good effects in the case of my mother. She has taken it when she was weak and her health was poor and she says she knows of nothing better to build her up and make her feel strong." Bessie M Knowles, Upper Wood Harbor, N. S.

EUREKA!

As you travel through southeastern Kansas about one hundred and twenty-five miles south of Topeka and eighty-five miles east of Wichita, the brakeman sticks his head in the doorway and yells: "Yreeky!" and a couple of minutes later the train pulls into Eureka, the prosperous county seat of Greenwood County.

One of the happy inhabitants of Eureka is Mrs. Sarah E. Taylor, and the reasons for her present happiness are set forth in the following letter addressed to Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the "Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute," of Buffalo, N. Y.

Mrs. Taylor says:

"I had been a sufferer for fifteen years and in August 1896 was taken with severe cramping pain in my stomach. A hard lump about the size of a goose egg formed in my right side. It became so sore I could scarcely walk about the house, and I had no appetite. I consulted two of the best doctors in town and they said medicine would do me no good. I gave up all hope of ever getting well again. One day I thought I would write to you telling you of my condition. You told me I had enlargement of one of the lobes of my liver and the gall bladder, and advised me to take your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pleasant Pellets.' I had not taken more than half a bottle of each when I began to feel better, and my appetite came back, and for a little over a year since, I began to do my work."

"I consulted two of the best doctors in town."

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a medicine that cures on rational, scientific principles. It is the discovery of a regularly graduated, practicing physician of high standing. It tones up the stomach, stimulates the liver and regulates the bowels. It brings all the digestive organs into healthy activity. It neutralizes and eradicates all poisonous, effete matter in the blood and fills it with the rich, vital, red corpuscles of health and vigor.

The "Discovery" is a temperance medicine. It contains no alcohol in any form.

SUCCEEDS JUDGE HAWKINS.

Mr. T. T. Bucknile, Q.C. and M.P., Raised to the British Bench.

London, Jan. 3.—Mr. Thomas Townshend Bucknile, Queen's Counsel and member of Parliament in the Conservative interest for Mid-Surrey (Epsom), has been raised to the Bench of the High Court of Judicature in succession to Justice Sir Henry Hawkins, who recently retired from the exchequer division, and was yesterday raised to the peerage. Mr. Bucknile, who is one of the ablest lawyers in the Conservative party, is a member of the western circuit, and in addition to his Parliamentary representation of Mid-Surry, holds the post of recorder of Exeter. He is a Warwickshire man, was born in 1845 and educated at Westminster and Geneva, and has been at the bar since 1868. He is the editor of "Cummingham's Reports," and of "Cooke's Common Pleas Reports."

TO PAY OFF THE BANK.

Russian Government Wishes to Show That It Is Not Hard Up.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 3.—An Imperial decree just issued directs the payment of 75,000,000 roubles out of the free cash reserves in the Imperial Treasury for the redemption of a large portion of the state debt to the Imperial Bank.

The issuance of the ukase is regarded as disproving the reports spread abroad of Russia's embarrassment, and of her efforts to contract a loan.

It is declared on trustworthy authority that the question of a loan in no way engages the Government's attention, and that the suggestions to the contrary emanate from representatives of the financial world, who unceasingly address the loan proposals to Russia.

WILLIAM TO NICHOLAS.

Letter From the Former to the Latter Read Publicly at St. Petersburg.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 3.—At a banquet given yesterday at the Military Academy of Medicine, Lieut.-General Kuropatkin, in obedience to the Czar's command, read a letter from Emperor William to Emperor Nicholas, expressing the former's congratulation upon the celebration of the academy's centenary. The letter concluded as follows:

"I am very pleased to renew to Your Majesty assurances of my high esteem and unalterable friendship, in all of which I am your good brother."

The reading of the letter was received with resounding cheers for Emperor William.

British Shipbuilding Boom.

London, Jan. 3.—After a long period of self-abasement and the bewailing of British commercial and industrial decadence, Englishmen have been cheering themselves during Christmas week with the statistics of the shipbuilding boom in 1898. British shipbuilders closed the year with about 2,000,000 tons on hand, which is nearly four times the total tonnage built in all foreign countries in 1898, and an increase of 500,000 tons on the shipping under construction at the outset of the year.

The total value of mercantile shipbuilding in 1898 is £20,000,000, and the allied industries have naturally been stimulated.

The Queen for Peace.

Paris, Jan. 3.—The Journal has from a personage belonging to the suite of the ex-Empress Eugenie the statement that upon the eve of her departure from England, in the early days of the Fashoda incident, the ex-Empress took leave of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, who said: "If war should break out between France and England, I would ask God to allow me to die before hostilities began."

Three days later, it is added, the secretary of the ex-Empress communicated the words of Queen Victoria to the French Foreign Office.

A MAN AND A BOY DROWNED.

Two Hamilton Iceboaters Find Graves Beneath Burlington Bay's Waves.

Hamilton, Jan. 3.—Last night two persons were added to the list of victims who found watery graves in Burlington Bay this winter. Their names are Peter McKeown, who boarded at William Dillon's hotel, Bay street north, and John Dornan, John street north. The former was 38 years of age and the latter 18. They were sailing in Dillon's iceboat about 7 o'clock with five other persons, including John Hinchcliffe, McCauley street. McKeown was at the tiller, and ran the boat into open water, being unable to see in the darkness, at a point midway between the port at McNab street and Bay View Park wharf. Hinchcliffe pulled out four of those who got into the water. The two men who were drowned got under the sail of the boat and could not get out.

TWO FIENDISH TRAMPS.

Shot the Man Who Gave Them Shelter and Bound His Wife.

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 3.—John Mellmer of Lafayette, Nicolette County, was shot in the head and hip by two tramps whom he had given shelter. They bound Mrs. Mellmer to a lounge with a clothesline and escaped with Mellmer's team. After the men had gone Mrs. Mellmer began gnawing at the rope with her teeth and, after several hours of hard struggle, succeeded in biting the cord in two and liberating herself. Going immediately into the yard, she found her husband dead and his body frozen. A large posse of farmers armed with the rope with which Mrs. Mellmer had been tied, have gone in pursuit of the desperadoes.

Caught by a Folding Bed.

Springfield, Ill., Jan. 3.—Mrs. Lucretia Kent, a widow, met her death in a manner horrible in the extreme. Her fate was revealed when a friend entering the house found her dead body. One hand was badly decomposed, showing that death had occurred several days ago. When found, the woman's broken hand was still clasped in the bed as in a blacksmith's vise. The woman lived alone in th house.

His Injuries Proved Fatal.

Toronto, Jan. 3.—Robert Russell, the man who was terribly hurt by a huge block falling on him on Saturday morning last while working in the new planing mill on Dundas street, died last night in the Western Hospital, never regaining consciousness. Deceased was 30 years of age and unmarried. Coroner Orr will hold an inquest.

Dr. A. W. Chase's Ointment...

Endorsed by Dr. C. M. Harlan of the American Journal of Health

NOT A PATENT MEDICINE....

He says:—Among the proprietary medicines recognized is Dr. Chase's Ointment, compounded by Dr. A. W. Chase Medicine Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto, as a remedy for Piles, Eruptions and Eczematic Skin Diseases, for which it has been used with marked success and has effected remarkable cures. It is not the practice of the Medical Profession indiscriminately to use proprietary medicines, but there are hundreds of physicians throughout this country who are using Dr. Chase's Ointment in their practice. We handed out during the last month 2,700 boxes of free samples of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and the thankful results have been something astonishing. Here is what one of the cures says:

Mr. O. P. St. John, 246 Shaw St., Toronto, in his letter states: I suffered for some years from Itching Piles, at times being unable to sleep for the annoyance caused by them. After trying almost every remedy known, I was induced to try Dr. Chase's Ointment, and can say one box entirely cured me. I cannot speak too highly of it, and have recommended it to several of my friends, all whom have been cured by its use.

A NEW INVENTION

The Newcombe Piano Has It.

It consists of a Patented Practice CLAVIER or STOP which diminishes the tone when required and saves wear on the Piano; it also does away with the old way of having to press down the pedal with the foot in order to soften the tone when running the scales or practicing. Oftentimes the young pupil on the piano cannot press down on the pedal without throwing themselves out of the proper position when they should sit erect. This invention in the NEWCOMBE PIANO will enable children to begin two years earlier on the piano. In addition to the above, the NEWCOMBE PIANO is the finest made in Canada. Children often complain about practicing; they like it if they have a NEWCOMBE PIANO. 1898 styles are gems of art, containing every late improvement; they possess that beautiful full sweet tone which delights the singer, and so pleases every musical ear. Organs of every description at Wholesale Prices.

SPAIN'S SAD NEW YEAR

Close of Four Centuries of the Colonial Rule of the Dons.

NOW HAS FEARS OF BRITAIN.

A Coaling Station in the Balearic Isles Talked of for the Mother of Anglo-Saxon Nations—Portugal Will Hold Her Colonies—Britain Will Squeeze France—Cable News.

Madrid, Jan. 3.—The New Year editorials in the Madrid press are sad and dignified reminders that the hoisting of the United States flag in Cuba and the Philippines means the closing of four centuries of Spanish colonial history.

With suppressed emotion, rather than bitterness, the papers exhort the people to have confidence in their recuperative power, urging that there be the smallest possible waste of time in reorganizing the affairs of the country and expressing a special desire for a speedy settlement of the Cabinet crisis.

The general belief is that Senor Sagasta will be able to resume his duties as Premier by the end of the week, and that he will form a Cabinet to include Lieutenant-General Weyler.

Blew Up 14 Forts.

Madrid, Jan. 3.—Gen. Rios, the Spanish commander, cables that he has arrived at Manila on board the Leon XIII., after having evacuated the Visayas and the northern part of the Island of Mindanao, after blowing up 14 forts, and the fleet of gunboats on Lake Lano. He adds that 1,600 Spanish troops are concentrated at Zamboanga, under command of Gen. Montero. The Spanish general also says that before quitting the trenches he warned the insurgents in the vicinity of Iloilo that if they fired a single shot he would raze the town. The Spanish transport Montserrat sails for Spain on Jan. 14, and the Leon XIII., with Gen. Rios on board, sails for Spain on Jan. 19.

BRITAIN IS PUSHING SPAIN

To Sell a Coaling Station in the Balearic Islands.

Madrid, Jan. 3.—The Premier, Senor Sagasta, sat up for four hours yesterday and received successively the Minister of War, the President of the Chamber and the Prefect of Madrid. He will continue his receptions to-day.

Official circles here are warmly discussing the attitude of Great Britain, owing to her pressing demands that Spain sell her a coaling station in the Balearic Islands and other strategical points, so as to render Gibraltar unassailable. The negotiations on the subject have been in abeyance owing to Premier Sagasta's illness, but it is believed that Spain, influenced by France and Russia, will resist the demands of Great Britain.

Portugal Will Hold Her Colonies.

Lisbon, Jan. 3.—King Charles opened the two legislative chambers yesterday. During the course of his speech from the throne, His Majesty said he greatly sympathized with the Czar's disarmament proposals, and made a reference to the colonies which apparently disposes of the rumors of the sale of Delagoa Bay. He said: "It is not sufficient to preserve our colonial domains in their complete integrity as the sacred heritage of the nation, but they must be developed as the solid basis of our economic regeneration."

England Will Squeeze France.

London, Jan. 3.—The report of the royal commission which Mr. Chamberlain appointed last year shows that, to be essential to peace, England had hoped to throw the French shore question into an all-round Anglo-French deal in Africa. But if France refuses an all-round African deal, and refuses to quit Newfoundland on fair terms, England has a means of keeping her out by keeping her fishermen to the strictest letter of the treaties, and using British warships, not as now to police the British fisheries in the interests of a few French, but to rigidly restrict these French to their barest rights.

LIST OF NEW YEAR'S HONORS.

Many Well-Known Names Honored by Her Majesty Queen Victoria.

London, Jan. 3.—The list of New Year's honors conferred by Her Majesty Queen Victoria, which has been issued, includes many names. Baron Cromer, former minister plenipotentiary in the diplomatic service and British agent and consul-general in Egypt, recently appointed Governor of Malta, is created a Viscount. Sir Philip Currie, British ambassador at Rome, and Sir Henry Hawkins, who recently retired from the exchequer division of the High Court of Judicature, are raised to the peerage.

Sir Henry Thompson, the distinguished pathologist, received a baronetcy.

Major-General Gascoigne, former commander of the Canadian Militia, is appointed a Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George.

Lord Dunraven is appointed a Privy Councillor for Ireland, and Sir Edward Chichester, R.N., a Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, in recognition of his services as captain of the British first-class armored cruiser Immortalite, which was stationed at Manila during the war, which, The Times points out, afforded him the opportunity to display tact and judgment, of which he took every advantage.

Mr. Sadler, the former British consul at Chicago, is made a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George.

The remaining honors are of the usual type—rewards for political service and theirs promotions in the civil, diplomatic, Indian and colonial services.

ALBANIA MUST SUFFER.

Turkish Army of 15,000 Men Hurried to the Macedonian Frontier.

Moscow, Jan. 3.—The incipient war on Macedonia has assumed a serious phase. Nikolai Pastouhoff, the editor and proprietor of the influential Maskowskij Listok, or Moscow Gazette, who has just returned from Constantinople, says that the Sultan has sent 15,000 men post haste to the Macedonian frontier, to chastise the Albians, whose raids into Servia King Alexander's troops are unable to resist.

M. Pastouhuff says the Sultan has rejected the reforms in Macedonia proposed by Austria and Russia jointly, and proposes to reform the border states according to his own method. Christians on both sides of the frontier are alarmed at the despatch of Turkish troops, for Abdul Hamid has appealed to the religious prejudice of the soldiers detailed to this service, and it is not believed that serious strife and much bloodshed can be avoided in putting an end to the reign of cruelty and terror now prevailing in Albania and Southern Servia.

FEARFUL CRUELTY IN COREA.

Outrageous Torture and Massacre by the Anti-Russian Party.

London, Jan. 3.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Times says:

The correspondent of The Novoe Vremya at Seoul, the Corean capital, relates terrible crimes by the anti-Russian party, who, since the departure of the Russian financiers and drill instructors, have wreaked vengeance, by vile deceit and barbarous cruelty, on the Corean ex-Dragoman of the Russian embassy, the official who safeguarded the removal of the Corean Emperor to the Russian Mission House.

The officials, his wife and other Coreans were mercilessly tortured, with a view of compelling them to confess to a false charge of poisoning the Emperor's coffee, in order to shield the real criminals, who are among the high officials. The ex-Dragoman was finally brutally murdered, mutilated publicly, and made sport of in a savage and disgusting manner. All this, the writer says, occurred in a country blessed with American and other Christian missionaries, and where American officials occupy influential posts in the Corean Government service.

TO OUR WOMEN.

Worthless Home Dyes that Cause Serious Losses in Many Homes.

Many of our Canadian women have been so grossly deceived in the year just closed by worthless home dyes that some have determined never again to try what is really a pleasant and profitable work when the Diamond Dyes are used.

While we sympathize with the many deceived women, we must say there decision is not a wise one. Because we have in our midst a few unskilled Dye manufacturers, and money-loving merchants who for the sake of long profits are ready to sell poor goods, it is not fair to assert that all merchants are actuated by the same unworthy motives.

Deceptive dyes have usually plenty of bulk to recommend them, but this bulk is generally composed of common coarse ingredients. Some dyes have just colouring power sufficient to make them dangerous to any ordinary material, others have a small percentage of colour virtue with an extra supply of soap grease power. Such are the dyestuffs that have wrought ruin to good materials, dresses, skirts, blouses, ribbons, suits for men and boys, and brought consternation to many a trusting and worthy woman.

While it cannot be denied that deception has a footing in our land, it is pleasing to know that the Diamond Dyes, representing perfect worth, honesty and truth, have brought gladness and profit to thousands of happy homes. All classes and conditions of women have used the Diamond Dyes with unvarying success, and during the year 1898, not a failure was reported when the very simple directions were followed.

Diamond Dyes are prepared according to special scientific principles, and no other dyes in the world have cost so much to bring to their present standard of excellence. They are the only kind that the wife, mother or daughter can use with confidence and profit.

Kingston, Dec. 19th.—The Limestone City has given Canada a majority of her greatest and most famous men. Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Oliver Mowat, Sir Geo. Kirkpatrick, Sir Richard Cartwright, and many other notable personalities claim the city as their home.

Kingston is no less famous as the scene of many of the most wonderful and startling cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills, than for the first named reason.

Now another is added to this long list of cures. Mr. Robert Orr, Pine street, reports that after suffering for years with Bladder trouble, Dodd's Kidney Pills completely cured him, though all other remedies had failed. Every city has a similar experience. Dodd's Kidney Pills have cured every time.

"IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY."

To Wm. McCabe, Esq., Managing Director, North American Life Assurance Co., Toronto:

DEAR SIR.—Your official notice came duly to hand, apprising me of the results obtainable upon my 15 year endowment Policy in your Company for $1,000, which matured on the 6th inst. Of the various options you have given me viz:

Cash value	$1,564 96
Paid-up Policy, payable at my death, for	2,560 00
Yearly Income for life of	166 20

I have decided upon the cash value; and it gives me pleasure to testify that, as I anticipated it would be when I took out the policy, IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY. This returns me the full premiums of the 15 years and over 4 per cent. compound interest, in addition to which you have carried the risk upon my life. In view of the lowering rates of interest which have been obtainable during the latter portion of the period, it is difficult to see how this excellent result could have been surpassed.

Yours sincerely,

A QUICK RESPONSE.

Charlotte Street Church—Red Letter Day.

Sunday was a red letter day in the Charlotte street church. The congregation was asked by the pastor to contribute $120 to liquidate all outstanding liabilities, with the exception of the mortgage on the property, and the amount was subscribed at the morning and evening service with the exception of $13, which was contributed at the close of the service by a friend of the church. So that to-day the Charlotte street church commences the new year without owing anyone a cent. In addition to paying the running expenses of the church during the year, and clearing off some other small outstanding liabilities, there was paid upon the debt of the church the sum of $1,800, so that the congregation and Ladies' Aid have accomplished a good financial year, the best for many years in the history of the church. Rev. Mr. Crossley, the pastor, is to be congratulated upon his excellent financing, and the congregation upon the ready response with which they have met his appeals.

The song service on Sunday evening was as usual largely attended, notwithstanding the extreme coldness of the weather. The subject of the discourse was "Best things for 1899."

PETERBOROUGH'S WIN FROM THE ABERDEEN'S.

THE TOWN POSSESSES A STRONG SENIOR TEAM.

The Score was 14—2—The Local Boys all Play a Good Game.

Those who were of the opinion that the Senior Peterborough's would be weak this year were pleasantly disappointed on Saturday evening, when the team vanquished the Aberdeens, of Ottawa, by the big score of 14 goals to 2.

Although the victory was an overwhelming one the visiting seven must not be lightly estimated. The fact that they defeated Orillia by 8 goals to 1, and the strong Waterloo seven by 6 to 2, stamps the Senators as being "hot stuff," and of a standing above that of the majority of Ontario hockey teams. Viewed in this light Saturday night's victory is one which should convince the citizens that the town is possessed of a hockey seven which will stand a good chance of landing the senior championship. Many of those who follow the game closely are of the opinion that this year the team is stronger than it has been for the past two seasons. The forward line has gained weight and experience and can certainly be said to have steadily improved. On the defense Hollingshead is putting up away ahead of the form which he displayed last year. He appears to have more confidence in himself and uses his body in checking with judgment and effect. His lifts are superb. Behind him Reynolds, the new coverpoint, is claimed to be a man most satisfactory to the goalkeeper—and he is the best judge. He is a trifle slow in getting after the puck, but clears well, having the art of lifting down to a science. In checking he is certainly head and shoulders over Montgomery. His mand never gets past him and this it is which finds him such favour with the team. It means a lot to know that one man is prevented from continuing a rush on the goals. Wasson did remarkably well Saturday evening and stopped a number of very warm shots. He promises to guard the flags even better than last season.

On the forward line Crossley replaced Phelan of last year's team. Hitherto his play has savoured of too much individuality, but in Saturday's match he passed the puck in a manner which found him much favour with the spectators and filled the void at centre, most satisfactorily, working from the face off, which resulted in many rushes being started. Lionel King and Belleghem did the bulk of the shooting from the sides, and the score shows that they apparently have their eyes in already for the season. The lifts on the goal were swift and sure, and how the Ottawa goal tender stopped some of them is a puzzle, but it is safe betting that he will carry the marks of that puck on his body for many a day. Twice he was struck with shots of such violence as to put him out of the game for a time. Davidson's chief work of the evening appeared to be the breaking up of the visitors' rushes, and this he did to perfection. Again and again he intercepted the Ottawa forwards when they were working a combination down the ice, and on the whole played the best game he has put up since being connected with the team.

The attendance at the match was not what it should have been, but the fact of it taking place on Saturday night doubtless decreased the chances of a big crowd being attracted.

The puck was faced off at about 8 45 o'clock and was taken down on with a rush, but Davidson broke up the visitor's combination and carried the puck in on the Ottawa goals. Up and down the rink the rubber travelled and both goalkeepers had an opportunity of showing their dexterity. Ottawa, however, got first blood, a shot from about the centre of the rink getting past three or four men and scoring. Time 3 minutes.

The crowd lost all heart and expected to see the visitors carrying off the honours easily, but their drooping spirits were revived when King scored from a scrimmage for Peterborough just half a minute later.

It just took Bert Belleghem two minutes to score one more for the home team, and in another minute Roger Davidson made the score 3—1.

The Aberdeens received a calling down from their captain and went in to rush things. Things were lively for a time around the Peterborough goal, but Wasson was there and stopped two hard shots, clearing well. It was 6¼ minutes before King ended the suspense by scoring. Score 4—1.

Again the game opened with a couple of rushes on the home goal and Wasson had to

NOTES.

Mr. Harry King made a most satisfactory referee. The Aberdeens expressed the wish that one like him had officiated at their games in Western Ontario.

Orillia treated the Ottawa players very roughly and Captain Cope had finally to call his men off the ice. After the game the visitors never laid eyes on one of the Orillia players.

At the conclusion of the game on Saturday evening the Peterboroughs banqueted the Aberdeens at the Palace Restaurant.

TUESDAY, JANUARY, 3, 1899.

FIFTY-FOUR YEARS AGO.

An Interesting Reminder of the Year of Grace 1845.

Mr. Robert Baker, of Ashburnham, while turning over some old papers came upon a "Wesleyan-Methodist Almanac" of the year 1845, being the "eighth year of Her Majesty's reign." On the first page, written in the neat, formal penmanship of the day, is the name of "Henry Richardson, Cavan." In 1845 there must have been an early spring, for Easter Sunday fell on the 23rd of March. At the end of the calendar is a well executed wood cut of "Wesleyan Church, Adelaide (late Newgate) street, Toronto." The church is a wooden structure, with a pediment front with two stories of windows, those of the second story being circular-headed. Then follows a list of ministers. Richard James was president of the single Conference of that period. Egerton Ryerson, D.D., was president of Victoria College, and Geo. F. Playter was editor of the Christian Guardian—"Terms 15s. per annum, payable in advance. The ministers stationed on Peterborough circuit were Thomas Demorest and Thomas Darlington. The number of members was given as 518. The Almanac of 1845 gives also a list of the clergy and ministers of other denominations. The "Episcopalian minister" at Peterborough was Robert J. C. Taylor. The Baptist minister was John Edwards. The Presbyterian (Free Church) minister for Peterborough and Cavan was J. M. Roger.

This almanac contains some interesting secular information. There is a table of duties on imports. At that time the people rejoiced under a double set of duties, "Imperial" and "Provincial." The imperial import duty on bacon and hams was 3s per cwt., provincial duty, 5s per cwt., the imperial duty on cheese was 5s per cwt., and the provincial duty, 2s 6d per cwt. The imperial duty on cottons was 7s per cent., and the provincial 5s per cwt., imperial duty on eggs 5 per cent., provincial 10 per cent. The import of foreign gun powder was prohibited, and the British gunpowder was imported free of imperial duties, while the provincial duty was 5 per cwt. The imperial duties admitted all sorts of live stock free, but the provincial tariff wall was raised high enough to exclude the most breachy stock. For instance according to the provincial tariff any import duty—bulls were charged 15s each, cows 10s, horses 30s, cows and oxen over 4, 20s each. The imperial duty on sugar, refined, was 20s per cwt. and the provincial 2d per pound. The imperial duty on foreign tea was 1d per pound, but tea imported direct from China was free. The provincial duty on tea was 3d per pound. According to both tariffs the importation of books, reprints of copyright British works was prohibited.

NEW BAPTIST CHAPEL

Formerly Dedicated Monday at Indian River—The Interesting Ceremonies.—The New Building.

Yesterday was a red-letter day in the community adjacent to Indian River station, 12 miles east of here on the C. P. R., the occasion being the opening of a new Baptist chapel. Just seven months ago Mr. T. H. Corbish of McMaster University, commenced work there under the auspices of the Park street Baptist church of Peterborough.

The meetings were first held in the public school building, and from the very beginning large congregations attended the Sabbath evening services. As the school building was only available for a limited time and as the residents were anxious that the meetings should be continued, the necessity of erecting a suitable place of worship became apparent. A committee was appointed to canvass for funds, and they met with so much encouragement that a contract was let to Mr. Wm. Johnston of Ashburnham for the erection of a frame building 45 x 28 feet, Mr. Andrew Shearer donating a lot 60x160 feet. The building is a frame one, and would adorn any corner in the town. It reflects credit upon the builder, as well as upon the community. The cut here given will given an idea of the general appearance of the exterior.

The main entrance is from the east side in the lower part of the tower from which one passes into the main audience room, a fine room 26x35, comfortably seated with chairs. At the west end of the building is the platform and baptistry, while on either side are robing rooms. The ceiling is of basswood, oiled and varnished, and a wainscot of the same material and finished in the same manner runs around the interior of the building.

On Sunday the dedicatory services were held, Rev. D. M. Welton, D.D., of McMaster University, preaching two eloquent sermons to large congregations.

On Monday evening a meeting of a social nature was held, and the building was crowded to its utmost capacity. Tea was served from 4 o'clock till seven, and fully 300 people were served in that time. Farming communities are proverbial for their hospitality, and this reputation was in no wise injured by the repast served by the ladies of Indian River. After all had satisfied the cravings of the inner man, an excellent programme of vocal and instrumental music was rendered by Messrs. Pengelly and Raddon, and Mr. J. Roxburgh, of Norwood, brief addresses by Revs. O. C. Elliott, of Peterborough, and Wm. Peter, of Norwood, and Rev. J. B. Kennedy, B.A., of Toronto, on "A man's a man for a that." The cost of the building, with sheds and furnishings, will be about $900 and this has been provided for with the exception of one hundred dollars. This balance will no doubt be met within a short time so that the work will be practically free from debt. During the winter there will be a service held every Sabbath evening, conducted by students from McMaster University, of Toronto.

About forty-five went out from the parent church, Park street, to assist in opening ceremonies.

There were present besides a few friends of the young ladies, the following clergy: Most Rev. Dr. Gauthier, Archbishop of Kingston, Rev. Father Kelly, V. G. of Kingston, Bishop O'Connor, Very. Archdeacon Casey and Fathers Sullivan and O'Brien of the Cathedral), Vicar General Laurent of Lindsay, Father Conway of Norwood, and Father Fitzpatrick of Young's Point.

The ceremony was performed by His Lordship Bishop O'Connor, assisted by Ven. Archdeacon Casey and Rev. Father Fitzpatrick Rev. Father Kelly delivered a most appropriate sermon.

TWIN TORTURERS!

Lumbago and Rheumatism made Harmless by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Lumbago and Rheumatism cause endless pain and suffering. Every man and woman who runs chances of getting wet, or catching cold, is liable to suffer from one or both. Our hospitals are full of sufferers from these diseases; none are more painful. Every nerve is on fire; every joint is a centre of agony; every muscle an area of torture. To move hand or foot makes the victim shriek with agony.

Rheumatism makes more cripples than all the railroad accidents that ever happened. Twisted, mis-shapen caricatures of humanity, who cannot walk without misery, are to be seen every day. The kidneys are to blame. If they are healthy you needn't fear Rheumatism or Lumbago. Dodd's Kidney Pills keep the kidneys healthy and cure Rheumatism and Lumbago.

Dodd's Kidney Pills ALWAYS CURE

FAIRYLAND.

You need not travel to a star;
The way is easy and not far—
An hour's walk, a mile from town.
The herons of the old lagoon
Lead you along the path; for sign
Are arrowhead blossoms, frail and fine,
Beside the water; then the wood
Takes you, but only by the blood
Leaping, and by the sudden start
Of the overfull and thrilling heart,
You know you see it face to face.
The greenwood bowers a sunny space
For song sparrow tinkling, and below
July's green lap is full of snow,
Is drifted rich with white and pink,
Of bouncing bet from brink to brink;
The haunted air resounds between
With humming birds, obscure and keen,
Like burnt out stars that dart and float,
With but a last fire to the throat.
You saw but common summer flowers?
Heard but a hum that drowsed the hours?
Your blood leaped not nor shook your heart?
Ah, well, I know no other chart!
The path is for your feet as far
As that which leadeth to a star.

First Symptoms.

Banish the Little Aches and Pains That Lead to Serious Diseases.

Paine's Celery Compound is the Medicine That Gives the Surest and Best Results.

Physicians with the most extended practice are well aware that there is nothing known to medical science equal to Paine's Celery Compound, for regulating the nervous system and banishing disease.

Men and women naturally love life, yet it is astonishing how careless and indifferent they are about the first symptoms of grave troubles. The sharp and piercing pains in joints and limbs, those ominous pains over the kidneys, that debility, nervousness, insomnia, ugly eruptions on the face and body—all are signals and warnings of grave diseases and sufferings. Paine's Celery Compound used promptly will speedily banish every dangerous symptom, keep the body and nerves in perfect condition, and add power to the mental faculties.

The most sensible and rational way of getting rid of neuralgia; the true mode of building up the shattered nervous system, is through the use of a nerve medicine and blood regulator and cleanser like Paine's Celery Compound. When the nerve centres are made strong, and the tissues and veins supplied with healthy blood, rheumatism and neuralgia must quickly leave the body.

Are you, dear reader, tired, dull, nervous, all-gone, miserable, full of despondency or irritable? If so, use Paine's Celery Compound without delay, and enjoy true and vigorous life. Carelessness, delay and indifference will surely drag you down to greater misery and increased pain.

She Had Her Way.

"I guess not."

"He's too old to travel free. He occupies a whole seat, and the car's crowded. There are people standing up."

"That's all right."

"I haven't time to argue the matter, ma'am. You'll have to pay for that boy."

"I've never paid for him yet, and I'm not going to begin now."

"You've got to begin some time. If you haven't had to put up fare for him, you're mighty lucky or else you don't do much traveling."

"That's all right."

"You'll pay for that boy, ma'am, or I'll stop the train and put him off."

"That's all right. You put him off if you think that's the way to get anything out of me."

"You ought to know what the rules of this road are, ma'am. How old is that boy?"

"I don't know. I never saw him before If you want a ticket for him, you'd better ask that old gentleman down the aisle. He got on with him."

DESTROYED A FLEET

A WHALE'S REVENGE FOR THE HARPOONING OF HER CALF.

In Her Mad Fury She Succeeded in Killing Six Men and Injuring Fifty More and Splintering Fifty Fishing Boats.

A widely known and feared devilfish has its headquarters in the northern Pacific, mostly along the American coast, especially affecting the gulf of California. This huge creature is a mammal, one of the great whale family, really a rorqual of medium size and moderate yield of oil. Only the elite of the Yankee whalemen, dexterous and daring as are all the tribe, can hope to get "to windward" of the diabolically cunning giants whom they abuse with such fluent and frequent flow of picturesque profanity.

It is a peculiar characteristic of this animal that it seems ever on the alert, scarcely exposing for one moment its broad back above the sea surface when rising to spout and generally traveling, unlike all its congeners, not upon, but a few feet below, the water. For this reason, and in this fishery alone, the whalers arm themselves with iron shafted harpoons, in order to strike with greater force and certainty of direction a whale some distance beneath the surface. A standing order, too, among them is never by any chance to injure a calf while the mother lives, since such an act exposes all and sundry near the spot to imminent and violent death.

Neglect of this most necessary precaution, or more probably accident, once brought about a calamity that befell a fleet of 18 American whaleships which had been engaged in the "bowhead" fishery among the ice floes of the Arctic Pacific. In order to waste no time they came south when winter set in, and by common consent rendezvoused in Margarita bay, Lower California, for a month or two's "devil fishing."

The whales were exceedingly abundant that season, and all the ships were soon busy with as much blubber as they could manage. The ease with which the whales were being obtained, however, led to considerable carelessness and forgetfulness of the fact that the whale never changes its habits. One bright morning, about three weeks after the opening of the season, the whole flotilla of 52 boats, four from each ship, had been lowered and were making their way as rapidly as possible to the outlying parts of the great bay, keeping a bright lookout for "fish."

Spreading out fanwise, they were getting more and more scattered, when about near the center of the fleet some one suddenly "struck" and got fast to a fish, but hardly had the intimation been given when something very like panic seized upon the crowd. In a moment or two the reason was apparent. From some cause, never definitely known, a harpooner had in striking a large cow whale transfixed her calf at her side with his harpoon, killing it immediately.

The mother, having quietly satisfied herself that her offspring was really dead, turned upon her aggressors like a veritable demon of destruction, and while carefully avoiding exposure of her body to attack simply spread devastation among the flotilla. Whenever she rose to the surface, it was but for a second, to emit an expiration like the hiss of a lifting safety valve and almost always to destroy a boat or complete the destruction of one already hopelessly damaged.

Every blow was dealt with an accuracy and appearance of premeditation that filled the superstitious Portuguese, who formed a good half of the crews, with dismay—the more so that many of them could only guess at the original cause of what was really going on. The speed of the monster was so great that her almost simultaneous appearances at points widely separated made her seem ubiquitous, and as she gave no chance whatever for a blow it certainly looked as if all the boats would be destroyed seriatam. Not content with dealing one tremendous blow at a boat and reducing it at once to a bundle of loose boards, she renewed her attentions again and again to the wreckage, as if determined that the destruction should be complete.

Utter demoralization had seized even the veterans, and escape was the only thought governing all action. But the distance to shore was great, and the persistence and vigor of the furious leviathan, so far from diminishing, seemed to increase as the terrible work went on. At last two boats did succeed in reaching the beach at a point where it sloped very gradually. The crews had hardly leaped overboard to run their craft up high and dry when close behind them in the shallows foamed and rolled their relentless enemy, just too late to reach them.

Out of the large number of well equipped boats that left the ships that morning only these two escaped undamaged, and the loss of the season's work was irremediable. Over 50 men were badly injured, and six, one of whom was the unhappy origin of the whole trouble, were killed outright. The triumphant avenger of her slain offspring disappeared as silently as she had carried on her deadly warfare, as far as could be known unhurt, and with an accumulated hoard of experience that would if possible render her more of a "devil" to any unsuspecting whalemen who should hereafter have the misfortune to meet with and attack her than she had proved herself to be already. Dejected and crippled, the fleet lost no time in getting away from the spot and fleeing north to San Francisco, there to refit for other and more profitable fishing grounds.—Cornhill Magazine.

Wheat Prices Are Up Again in Both Liverpool and Chicago—The Latest Quotations.

Friday Evening, Dec. 30.

Liverpool wheat futures opened strong this morning, and closed with good advances over yesterday's final quotations. This month's delivery gained 1d, the March option ⅝d, and the May option ⅝d per cental. Paris wheat closed 5 to 10 centimes lower than yesterday, with flour 25 to 40 centimes lower. Antwerp wheat rose 12½ centimes.

Chicago futures to-day advanced 1½c per bushel, and this month's delivery a full 2c per bushel. The chief bullish factors were the large exports, 72 loads taken for export as new business, and the strength of the cash article in all markets. Monday's figures are expected to show only a small increase, if any, in the American visible supply. The close was near the top price for the day.

STAYING HOME FROM SCHOOL.

Being a Short Chapter From the History of Little Susan Gratebar.

"I'm not going to school this morning," says little Susan Gratebar, and Mamma Gratebar, indulgent ever, makes no objection, for the rain is falling very heavily, the sky is dark, the wind northeast—a rainy day.

And so a leisurely breakfast for little Susan, a glance at the clock now and then as the school hour approaches, and a sense of pleasure as it passes and leaves her here at home instead of finding her in her accustomed place at school. For this is a break in the routine, a relief from school and studies, a novelty, for home to her in these unaccustomed hours seems strange, just as to any of us any familiar thing will seem strange when seen in any other than its familiar relations to other things.

And Susan reads and plays games with her little brother and walks about the house, and finally gets a little tired of it all, as any of us would, for we all, old and young, need for our welfare some regular employment—to have, as the saying is, our minds occupied. And presently little Susan gets interested in the weather. There's a thin place in the clouds, as there often is even on the rainiest days, and by comparison the sky lightens up a good deal. Then Susan says to her mother:

"Do you think it's going to clear off?"

But Mrs. Gratebar, older than Susan and wiser in the weather as in other things, says she hardly thinks so yet, and, sure enough, ten minutes later it has shut in blacker than ever and the rain falls more and more heavily. And so it goes, the whole day long—a rainy day—and Susan doesn't go to school at all. She stays in the house, and it gets pretty irksome before nightfall.

But some time in the night the wind changes and comes out from the northwest. The storm has passed, the sun shines brightly, and little Susan is up and off to school bright and early and glad to go.

MR. R. H. ORDE, GREYSTOCK, ONT.,

Says Laxa-Liver Pills cured himself and a friend of Constipation and Allied Troubles.

Everybody who has used Laxa-Liver Pills says they are the finest thing in the world of medicine.

Mr. R. H. Orde, of Greystock, Ont., is of this opinion and this is how he expresses himself:

"Some time ago I got a sample packet of Laxa-Liver Pills, and after I had used them with great satisfaction I sent to Mr. Madill's drug store, in Peterboro, and bought two bottles, one of which I gave to a frend of mine. He assured me they did him a world of good. His trouble was constipation and fluttering of the heart.

"In my own case the trouble was very similar, i.e., constipation, fluttering and palpitation of the heart, and pains in my legs, like rheumatism, when I lay down at night. I have only taken the pills a short time, but every one of the unpleasant symptoms has disappeared. The pills did their work thoroughly, yet so mildly that a person would not think he was taking medicine at all. I am highly pleased with their effects, and recommend Laxa-Liver Pills to all who suffer as I did."

Price 25c. a bottle or 5 for $1.00, at all druggists or sent by mail. T. MILBURN & Co., Toronto, Ont.

Women Need Not Suffer

From those terrible side aches, back aches, headaches and the thousand and one other ills which make life full of misery.

Most of these troubles are due to impure, imperfectly filtered blood—the Kidneys are not acting right and in consequence the system is being poisoned with impurities.

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS

are daily proving themselves woman's greatest friend and benefactor.

Here is an instance:

Mrs. Harry Fleming, St. Mary's, N.B., says: "The use of Doan's Kidney Pills restored me to complete health. The first symptoms I noticed in my case were severe pains in the small of my back and around the loins, together with general weakness and loss of appetite.

I gradually became worse, until, hearing of Doan's Kidney Pills, I got a box from our druggist.

I am pleased to testify to their effectiveness in correcting the troubles from which I suffered.

My back has not ached since taking the first box and I feel built up and strong. I feel assured that anyone who tries these pills will be more than pleased with their good effects. Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c. a box or 3 for $1.25 at all druggists. The Doan Kidney Pill Co., Toronto, Ont.

A Woman's Crime.

A THRILLING STORY OF LOVE AND ADVENTURE.

By LAWRENCE M. LYNCH.

Author of "John Arthur's Ward," "The Diamond Coterie," "Against Odds," Etc., Etc.

"I shall have to come the old woman dodge, and pin a piece of paper on the door, telling him where I am and all about it," thought Neil, with a half laugh, as he approached his rooms.

He had hoped to find Jocelyn, or that he would come soon.

"I shall need his help, perhaps," he muttered, putting his key in the lock. "I. I leave the city I shall want Rob to look out for things hereabouts."

He pushed open the door, and entered, striking a match at almost the same instant. Reaching up, he lighted the gas, and then turned to close the door. As it swung forward his eye fell upon a yellow envelope that had evidently been pushed under, from without. Picking it up, he saw that it was a telegram, and opening it wonderingly, his eyes fell upon these words:

"Old Man:—B. and self have gone into the country; length of stay not known. Write later. Rob."

The message was dated from a station some ten miles out, on the Michigan Central road.

"Worse luck!" ejaculated the detective. "Jocelyn is worse than Paddy's flea. Well, my business here is done, I think, and no need to pin the old woman's tag to the door. 'B. and self have gone to the country,' that's Rob all over. Brady must have had news from his private enquirer."

Holding the telegram up to the gas flame, he watched it crumble to ashes, and then, turning out his light, locked his door and retraced his steps. Almost within the same hour, he sat alone in Clarence Arteveldt's old dressing-room, carefully examining the contents of a costly desk.

There were horribly scrawled notes from bon vivants, and horsey notes from well-known jockeys, scores of billets from fair ladies, many photographs, and—of course—some locks of hair.

He turned over the photographs; there were pictures of prominent actresses and vocalists; some of ladies with questionable faces, and many of ladies who, probably at one time or another, had enjoyed the brief adoration of the young man, once so fascinating, now shorn of all his charms, and sleeping his last sleep. From these he turned to the billet doux. It took a long time to master their contents, and so much sweetness was a trifle nauseating; nevertheless he kept on. Having perused them all, he singled out one from the mass, muttering, as he reopened it:—

"This has a slightly different flavour; but after all, doesn't mean much, perhaps."

The note was in a fine, but firm, woman's hand, and was without address or signature. It ran thus:—

I begin to doubt you. Don't think me blind, or that I am one to submit to neglect, after what has been. Remember, you are not dealing with one friendless, or helpless; I must see you to-night.

August 9th, 187—.

"No signature, no address," he murmured, "and bearing date only three months back. I will keep this."

He put it carefully in his pocket, and arose to examine the closets and dressing cases.

From the pocket of a coat, which hung in a small wardrobe, he drew a few letters. He instantly recognized the garment as one Arteveldt had worn when last he saw him. And glancing at the dates of the letters, he saw that they were very recent.

"That must be the coat he discarded to put on the wedding garment. Poor fellow; better if he had continued to wear this coat," he said, looking at it ruefully. "Now for these letters."

There were several bills from upholsterers and tradesmen, and from one of these a smaller missive dropped. Picking it up hastily, he glanced at the superscription. "How is this?" he exclaimed, at the same diving in his pocket for the note he had just stored away. "Ah!" glancing from one to the other. "It is the same writing, and dated—just four days ago."

Thus ran the second billet:—

I have seen the girl you think to make your wife. And—she does not love you—I swear it. I have warned you before. I repeat that warning. Break off this marriage, even at the last moment. Break it off—or the thunderbolt that hangs over you will fall.

"Is this a threat, or a warning?" said the detective, musingly; "the first billet embodies a threat, and whichever way this may be intended, the thunderbolt has fallen."

He put the two notes carefully in his pocket, and resumed his investigation.

Every pocket of every garment was searched, but nothing more could be discovered.

Approaching the grate, the quick eye of the detective saw something which made him start forward suddenly. Evidently the late occupant of the room had been burning papers on the last evening of his tenantship. The remains of that last fire had not yet been cleared away, and down there among the charred dead embers a scrap of scorched paper was visible. The detective seized it and scanned it eagerly. It was the fragment of a letter in the unmistakable handwriting of Clarence Arteveldt. The upper half of the sheet and a portion of the lower had been burned away, so that a part only of the concluding lines were preserved, making of course incomplete sense.

The fragments of lines read as follows:—

—this day returned your—and gifts. Have retained nothing—these useless threats—the admiration your beauty commands—position warrants. I shall be your friend—two must not meet.

This fragment bore no signature, and the detective was quick to connect it with the other unsigned notes.

"This loks business-like," said he to himself. "If one could only get at the meaning of these documents. This last, which sounds like an answer to the one of recent date, would indicate that the writer of that one did mean a threat, rather than a warning. If it is a threat, then the plot thickens; it would seem that poor Arteveldt had injured more than one woman, and that he had more than one enemy."

He finished his search, but without making further discoveries, and then closing the room, and locking it carefully, he left the house in the possession of Mrs. Arteveldt's old and tried housekeeper, and the under servants, and then hastened back to that other house of gloom.

Yesterday, these two elegant dwellings had been glowing with colour, and gay with preparations for bridal festivities. Surely never was wedding so swiftly followed by desolation and gloom. Only twenty-four hours have passed, and the curtains were drawn, stillness and desolation are everywhere. The servants have cast away their wedding favours, as if they were living deadly things, and go about with white, scared faces. The second act of Clarence Arteveldt's drama closes on a murdered bridegroom, a fugitive bride, a half-crazed mother, and horror in the hearts of all beholders.

CHAPTER XXI.

STARTLING NEWS, STRANGELY RECEIVED.

On reaching that other house of gloom, the detective goes straight to the room where Mrs. Arteveldt lies in a half stupor, and Kate Seaton sits wearily watching.

Opening the door softly, he signals the girl to come out to him, and noiselessly, without disturbing her charge, Kate obeys.

"I must have a word with you," he says, as they stand together under the dimly-burning hall chandelier. "I will be as brief as possible. Can you sit on that hall chair—uncomfortable looking thing—and answer a few more questions?"

She bowed, and, with a sigh of utter weariness, sank upon the seat designated.

"We are quite alone here," he said, looking about him, "as safe from interruption as if closeted in the library. Now, then, please answer my questions frankly. I am now seeking for evidence that will turn suspicion away from your friend, not for evidence against her."

Kate Seaton started up eagerly.

"Oh! is it possible," she cried—"is there anything that may be used in her favour?"

"It is possible," he replied, gravely. "I won't say as to the probability; that's another thing. But a detective must neglect no shadow of evidence for or against. If we could prove that Clarence Arteveldt had another enemy—if we could prove that another had breathed out threats against him, don't you see that your friend's case would look a shade less dark?"

"Yes. Oh, yes!"

"Then don't ask useless questions, but believe that all I do has its meaning. First, have you some of the bride's writing in your possession?"

"Yes; we were correspondents after I left school."

"In those letters did she mention any friends whom she especially trusted or felt a regard for?"

"Do you mean any lover?"

"I mean—any one."

"I am sure Lenore never had a lover until she came to the city, her mother guarded her so jealously. After her mother's death she did sometimes speak of a Dr. Austin, who was some sort of a guardian over her property, and in whom her mother had reposed fullest confidence."

"Dr. Austin! Did he live in the same village with her mother?"

"Yes, sir; he lived and, of course, still lives at Fairlie."

"You think that your friend trusted this Dr. Austin?"

"I know she did."

"Miss Seaton, I must ask for one or two of your friend's letters—those referring to this doctor; and it would aid me very much in forming correct conclusions if you would allow me to peruse the entire correspondence, on her side."

Kate hesitated a moment and then arose.

"Yes," she said; "I will let you see Lenore's letters. They are gems; as I said before, they will help her cause, not hurt it—and ah, she needs help."

"Yes; she needs help. When may I have the letters?"

"To-morrow. They are locked in my desk at the other house."

"Thank you. Now, please use your memory. Did Miss Armyn have any female acquaintances—in the city—of course—who were strangers to you?"

"No; I am sure she did not."

"You went out together usually?"

"Nearly always."

"In your walks or drives did she ever meet and converse with a strange woman? Did you ever, at any time, since her engagement to Clarence Arteveldt especially, know of her meeting with a stranger?"

For a moment Kate seems thinking intently, then a light breaks over her countenance.

"Why, yes. I do remember now," she exclaims; "I admitted the woman myself."

"Tell me about it," eagerly.

"I will. It was one night a little more than a week before this awful marriage—rather it was early in the evening, not yet fairly dark. It was raining, and the wind was blowing dismally. I remember thinking, when I opened the door, that it could be no pleasure caller who came out in such a storm. The hall was dimly-lighted, and I could not see her plainly; but it was a woman—a lady, I should judge. She spoke in a very low voice, and was completely muffled in a huge cloak and thick veil. She was not tall—just a little higher than I, perhaps. She asked for Lenore, and I left her in the parlour, and went up to Lenore's room. When I told her that a veiled stranger was downstairs, she seemed surprised, and then started to go down, saying, in that scornful way of hers, 'A veiled stranger, in a blowing storm! Bah! another farce, I suppose.' I wondered then what she could mean; but she had been so haughty and reserved of late, that I never dared question her about any of her odd sayings. The stranger stayed perhaps twenty minutes, and Lenore herself conducted her out. As she closed the door, and came slowly up the stairs again, I heard her laugh, the low, scornful laugh, that was all the mirth we had ever heard from her lips since that fatal engagement. She never mentioned the woman, or the object of her visit, and no one liked to question her."

"And that is all you can tell me?"

"That is all."

"Thank you, Miss Seaton. Now I am going to take your place by Mrs. Arteveldt; she will be wide awake soon, and you must go and rest."

It is useless to oppose him; Kate sees that, and she breathes a sigh of thankfulness as she goes to seek the repose she so much needs.

As Neil Bathurst takes her place by the bedside of the woman, who slumbers as if in a trance, then wakes suddenly, to rave, and cry piteously for the dead idol lying so motionless, not far away, his face is shadowed, his brows are contracted, his lips compressed. He bends the whole strength of his splendid intellect to the solution of a strange, knotty, woful problem. While the detective watches and ponders, let us look in upon some of the inmates of the Durand mansion.

ROBBED OF DIAMONDS.

Shocking Death by Fire of a Little Four-Year-Old Girl—Menelik to Humbert.

King Menelik has written a letter to King Humbert of Italy, promising a friendly demarcation of the Abyssinian frontier.

Henry Ronald, arrested in Woodstock, charged with horse stealing, has been taken to Windsor. He claims to have bought the horse from a man on the road near Woodstock.

At Nagy-Komlos, Hungary, a mob of strikers overpowered and disarmed the police, and tried to burn the residence of the local magistrate. The police got reinforcements and suppressed the mob.

At Alvinston, Ont., the 4-year-old daughter of Lachlan O'Neil was so burned by her dress catching fire from the stove during the momentary absence of her mother that she died a few hours later.

The report that Mme. Saville, the prima donna, had been robbed in New York of $10,000 worth of diamonds, is confirmed. The police are looking for Emil Becker, a waiter in the hotel, who has disappeared.

THE JENNISON SCHEME.

Port Arthur Electors Vote to Have Waterworks and a Big Canal.

Port Arthur, Jan. 3.—The Jennison bylaw, which is to enable the council to execute the contract to pay Jennison and his associates $10,000 per annum for 40 years for 750 electrical horsepower and 360,000,000 gallons of water per annum, was carried by 175 majority. Jennison proposes to spend $1,000,000 to build a canal from Kakabeka Falls to Port Arthur. This canal will develop 20,000 horse power, and have a head of water at Port Arthur of 300 feet for power, light, water and heat purposes.

Normal School Principal Dead.

Toronto, Jan. 3.—Mr. Thomas Kirkland, for many years principal of the Normal School, died at his residence on Saturday afternoon very suddenly, of heart failure. The deceased was born near Fanderagoe, County Armagh, Ireland, on Aug. 19, 1835. He received his education at the Normal School, Dublin; Albert National Training School, Glasnevin, and Queen's College, Belfast. In 1854 he came to Canada, and, after teaching in Oshawa, Barrie and Whitby, in 1871 became science master of the Toronto Normal School, and in 1884 was appointed principal, which position he held up to the time of his death. Mr. Kirkland was a member of the Senate of Toronto University and Knox College. He was a graduate of 'Varsity, and received the degree of M.A. in 1874.

The Bohemians Desire Autonomy.

Prague, Jan. 3.—From the opening of the Bohemian Landtag Wednesday, the German members have steadfastly refused to attend. The majority remained in session but one day after organization, adopted the budget and adjourned. The desire of the Czechs for an autonomous government in Bohemia subordinates all other political questions. The Czech members of the Diet express their intense disappointment and dissatisfaction that the Emperor, in his message to the Landtag, should have seen fit to make no reply to that body's former petition concerning the Bohemians' claim to an independence of action such as enjoyed by Hungary.

Some Fast Time.

Chicago, Jan. 3.—The new fast mail train on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy road, which pulled out of Omaha at 3.45 o'clock yesterday afternoon, rolled into the Union Depot in Chicago at 9.14 this morning, 10 hours and 29 minutes from Omaha, a distance of 502 miles. The train was drawn by engine 590, called the "Greyhound of the Burlington." The fastest time was just west of Aurora, where 90 miles an hour was made.

$35,000 FUR BUSINESS TO BE SOLD.

As we are about to dispose of our Fur Business here this spring in order to consolidate the energy and capital in our Toronto business, (J. & J. Lugsdin)—we find it necessary to at once reduce our large stock of Fine Furs to as low an amount as it is possible, before the 15th of February, 1899.

This means to the people of Peterborough and vicinity an opportunity to purchase High-Class Home-Manufactured Furs from a stock that is recognized as the finest and largest between Toronto and Montreal—and at prices that the shortness of the time—about one month—makes absolutely necessary to sell at a big sacrifice.

Space does not permit us to enumerate the many close quotations we are giving in Fur Coats, Jackets, Cloaks, Capes, Caps, Ruffs, Muffs, Gauntlets, Collarettes, etc. Sufficient to say—that the word "Bargain"—taken at its full meaning—exactly explains the situation.

On Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, while we will be open for business, we will also be going through the whole stock, marking down to sale price every article. On Thursday and following days you can reap the benefit of this two days work.

"Shop early and"—— but 'tis useless to tell interested and sensible people of the advisability of following a course so reasonable.

BERESFORD ON CHINA.

Russian Encroachments to Be Firmly Met.

AN "OPEN DOOR" ALLIANCE.

Reform of the Whole System of Chinese Administration Necessary—Not a Case of Insuperable Difficulties—Trouble Over Tariffs Predicted—A Clean, Chivalrous Policy Advocated.

London, Jan. 4.—The Hong Kong correspondent of The Times says:

Lord Charles Beresford, addressing the Chamber of Commerce here to-day (Tuesday) on the necessity of firmness in opposing Russian encroachment, repeated his advocacy of an alliance between Great Britain, Germany, the United States and Japan to maintain the "open door." He made an interesting commentary upon Chinese affairs, remarking that all the institutions of the country were in a deplorably effete condition. In his judgment an army of 200,000 men might be maintained without increasing the present budget, if wastes were avoided.

Lord Beresford said the whole system of Chinese administration required reforming. Reforms would not be difficult, as there was no hereditary rights, feudal system or vested interests, such as existed when Japan initiated reforms. China was not overtaxed, he asserted, but simply taxed badly. The first step in reform would be the adequate payment of the officials. He predicted that there would be trouble sooner or later over tariffs, saying that the French demands at Shanghai promised to make trouble. In conclusion, he advocated a chivalrous and clear policy toward China, and the foreign powers interested in China.

Disturbances in China.

London, Jan. 4.—According to a despatch from Hankau to The Morning Post, there are alarming reports from the Upper Yangtse Kiang region. The disturbances are increasing in the Provinces of Sze Chuan, Hunan and Hupe.

The Dowager Empress, it is further asserted, is curtailing the authority of viceroys and especially in the Yangtse and Hankau districts.

A body of Chinese troops was sent to attack the rebels, but they are said to have fled before the enemy. The viceroy has been reinforced by three gunboats and 3,000 men.

THE MARCH FROM UGANDA.

Major Martyr's Expedition Will Likely Be a Bloodless One.

London, Jan. 4.—Major Martyr's expedition from Uganda to Khartoum is not likely to involve any fighting. Reuter's Agency learns from an officer who has for some years been serving on the Nile in the extreme north of Unyoro that the work of the expedition is merely the establishment and occupation of certain posts, some of which were perforce abandoned in troublous times.

Duffieh, which is on the line of march, was visited by the British in 1894, and strong posts had been established at Mrull, Fowera and Jajao. The last-named place and several other posts were abandoned during the hostilities with the Soudanese mutineers which broke out in October, 1897.

Fajao has now been reoccupied, and the expedition is pushing northward along the Nile through what used to be a Dervish sphere of influence. As for the Soudanese mutineers, they have been practically wiped out.

Thousands Were Killed.

Cairo, Jan. 4.—According to news from Yemen, Abdullah Pasha, the commander of the Turkish troops in Arabia, is officially reported to have gained a complete victory over the rebels on Nov. 17, after desperate fighting, in which thousands were killed.

It is estimated that during the famine in the vilayet of Yemen 15,000 persons died in Sana and 200,000 in the country districts.

DIEPPE STEAMER WRECKED.

Five of the Crew of the Channel Steamer Angers Were Drowned.

London, Jan. 4.—Incoming steamers at different ports report that the frightful weather continues along the British coasts and in the Bay of Biscay.

The channel steamer Angers, of 1,689 tons, trading between New Haven and Dieppe, has been wrecked at the entrance to Dieppe harbor. Five of her crew were drowned. Her cargo is washing ashore.

Details received regarding the wreck of the steamer at the entrance of Dieppe harbor show that she was a local cargo boat, and crashed into the end of the jetty at midnight, partly destroying it. The captain and 14 of the crew succeeded in clinging to the part of the jetty, which was cut off from the shore. They remained there all night long and their cries brought succor in the morning. One man perished from exhaustion and four men were drowned in the engine room.

To Be Treated as in Lunacy.

London, Jan. 4—There came into force yesterday the first Act of Parliament attempting to deal with habitual drunkenness by establishing the principle that it is to be treated like lunacy, as a form of disease which the state must take cognizance of, with a view not only to the safety of society, but to the proper care of the patient. Under the new law, four convictions of drunkenness during 12 months bring the person so convicted under the category of habitual drunkards and procure his committal to a reformatory or retreat where he may be regarded as a criminal undergoing sentence. The discipline at the reformatories will not be severe. The prisoners will have to work but six hours daily, and will be provided with many comforts, including tobacco.

Menelik After Gojam's King.

Rome, Jan. 4.—Telegrams received yesterday from Signor Martini, Governor of Erythrea, state that the Negus has arrived at Borumieda, and is marching his army towards Gojam, whose king showed signs of rebellion.

Another Mussulman Mutiny.

Moscow, Russia, Jan. 4.—News has been received from the military governor of Fergham Province, Turkestan, that he has discovered the mussulmans of that region are plotting another mutiny.

LEFT THE DART HELPLESS.

Newby Stood by Her for 27 Hours Without Avail.

Queenstown, Jan. 4.—The British steamer Newby, Capt. Clark, from Philadelphia on Dec. 16, for this port, has arrived here and reported having met the British steamer Dart, Captain Clark, from Philadelphia, on Dec. 13, for London, on Dec. 29, in latitude 49 north and longitude 18 west, with her propeller carried away. The Newby towed the Dart for an hour, after which the hawser parted. Although the Newby stood by the Dart for 27 hours, she was unable to get another hawser on board, owing to the terrific weather prevailing, and, for her own safety, was obliged to proceed, leaving the Dart in a helpless condition. As it was, the cabin of the Newby was flooded and much interior damage was done, her boats were stove in, and her deckwork was badly injured. The second mate and a seaman of the Newby were injured, all the provisions on board were destroyed and the crew lost part of their clothing.

FAREWELL TO FREE AMERICA.

The Paris Temps Reads President McKinley a Lesson.

New York, Jan. 4.—A despatch to The Herald from Paris says: The Temps tonight draws a gloomy picture of the future of the United States. It says that the United States cannot hide the fact that they "have said good-bye forever to the idyllic era wherein they dispensed with the regular standing army and laughed at the heavy burdens imposed upon the nations of the eastern continent by their international situation.

"There is not a Democrat, not a friend of the principles that regulate modern society," continues The Temps, "that does not deplore bitterly the inoculation with a spirit of conquest of territories and expansion of a democracy that hitherto has been peaceful and liberal.

"President McKinley may say farewell for free America, to the era peace and good-will, reforms, economy, internal progress and self-government."

A Tragic Mistake.

Johannesburg, S.A.R., Jan. 4.—During last night Mrs. Mackintosh, wife of the late manager of E. K. Green & Co., awoke under the impression that there were thieves in the house, and awakened her husband. He went round, saw nobody, and returned to bed. His wife, still feeling restless, arose, and, unknown to her husband, sat on a seat by the window Mr. Mackintosh again awoke and, seeing a head at the window, drew his revolver and shot his wife through the temple, dead. Immediately afterward he discovered the terrible mistake he had made. Mr. Mackintosh was arrested and immediately released on bail.

Jamaica Comes In.

Kingston, Jamaica, Jan. 4.—Jamaica has succumbed to Canada's earnest solicitations to join the penny postal system. The Jamaica Government acknowledges that the sacrifice is not great, seeing that the whole postal business with Canada last year amounted to only $11 odd.

The Government, however, is still obdurate respecting Imperial penny postage. In official quarters it is said that the other West Indian colonies have consented to adopt the system only because they have received Imperial grants.

To Lynch "Jack the Ripper."

Vienna, Jan. 4.—Last night another "Jack the Ripper" murder was committed in this city. The victim was a woman named Shilka. The murderer, a butcher's apprentice, was caught as he was escaping from the house, and the mob that quickly gathered tried to hang him. He was rescued by the police, and he now lies in a police station, feigning unconsciousness. The police believe the man is the same who murdered a woman named Hofer under similar circumstances Christmas Eve.

A Warning From the Rebels.

Manila, Jan. 4.—Advices just received from Iloilo say the rebels, at a meeting on Saturday, ratified the action of a delegation which assured the Americans that they might land unarmed, but that if the latter landed armed the natives would be uncontrollable. It is further said that every preparation is being made for resistance upon the part of the rebel, and that reinforcements are arriving from Negros and the neighboring islands.

Miser Leaves £38,000 to Charity.

London, Jan. 4.—The London City Mission is about to receive £38,000, bequeathed by an Englishwoman, who lived the life of a miser, and who died at Caen, in Normandy, last summer, at the age of 86. She lived for years on bread and milk left daily at her window, for which she paid daily. The name of the woman is unknown.

Lord Curzon at Calcutta.

Calcutta, Jan. 4.—The new Viceroy of India, Lord Curzon of Kedleston, and Lady Curzon arrived here at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon and were received by the Government officials and the military and civil authorities at Howrah Station of the East Indian Railroad. The volunteer and native infantry furnished a guard of honor and gave the royal salute.

Kruger Preached.

Johannesburg, Jan. 4.—Mr. Kruger preached in Pretoria before the three united Dutch churches. He declared the reason that so few burghers were killed in the Mpefu campaign was that the Lord was with the nation. Mr. Kruger's health is improving.

Norwegian Barque Wrecked

Falmouth, Eng., Jan. 4.—The Norwegian barque Spranza, Captain Nielsen, which sailed from Cardiff on Dec. 20 for Pernambuco, has been wrecked on St. Agnes, the southernmost of the Scilly Islands. The crew is missing.

A Bloodless Duel.

Buda-Pesth, Jan. 4.—The duel between M. Horansky, a member of the Lower House of the Hungarian Diet, and Baron Banffy, the Premier, took place yesterday morning. Pistols were the weapons used. The duel was bloodless.

The Pope Was in Luck.

Rome, Jan. 4.—The presents of money and valuables sent to the Pope during 1898 amounted to more than $2,000,000 in value, including $800,000 in Peter's pence.

ARTIFICIAL INDIGO THE LATEST.

Germany Now Prepared to Place the Product on the Market.

Berlin, Jan. 4.—Coal tar has yet another conquest to record. It threatens to supplant the indigo tree of India and Java by supplying an indigo chemically identical with and infinitely purer than that hitherto on the market.

As long ago as 1882 a German chemist, Dr. A. von Baeyers, discoverred several methods of obtaining indigo blue from cinnamic acid and bitter almond oil, which themselves are a product of coal tar, but all were too costly for commercial purposes.

Other chemists took up the work where Baeyers had left it, and after years of toil it was announced 18 months ago that the Baden Aniline and Soda Works, at Ludwigshafen, on the Rhine, were in a position to supply indigo obtained by an improvement of the process discovered by Dr. Baeyers, and at a price low enough to compete with natural indigo.

The raw material for the new product is naphthaline, a constituent part of coal tar, known to the public as an excellent remedy against moths, etc., and which, by a series of elaborate operations, is converted into indigo blue. The factory has gradually increased its promising powers and hopes soon to be able to export to other indigo-using countries.

It may be mentioned that Germany already supplies 70 per cent. of the world's consumption of dye-stuffs from coal tar.

Insurance Matters in Kansas.

Topeka, Kan., Jan. 4.—The railroad bill and the bill taxing insurance companies on their gross premiums, as passed by the extra session of the Legislature, were signed by Governor Leedy yesterday. The insurance bill places a tax of two per cent. on the gross premiums on the Kansas business of all outside insurance companies whether fire, life or accident, and four per cent. on European and other foreign countries.

Out Against Brewer.

Toronto, Jan. 4.—The Liberal candidate in East Elgin, Mr. D. McIntyre, yesterday filed a notice of appeal against the decision of the Election Court confirming the election of the Conservative candidate, Mr. C. T. Brower. The books will not be filed until the 20th, consequently the charges are unknown.

Bodies Have Been Found.

Hamilton, Jan. 4.—The bodies of Peter McKeown and young John Dornan, who met their death Monday evening while iceboating on the bay, were recovered yesterday morning.

Grand Trunk Files a Claim.

Albany, N.Y., Jan. 4.—The Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada yesterday filed with the State Court of Claims a claim against the State for $51,529.

All Covered With Eruptions—Could Not Work, the Suffering Was So Great—Hood's Has Cured.

"I was all run down with complaints peculiar to my sex, and I broke out in sores on my body, head, limbs and hands, and my hair all came out. I was under the doctor's treatment a long time without benefit. They called my trouble eczema. Finally I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after I had used three or four bottles I found I was improving. I kept on until I had taken several more bottles and the sores and itching have disappeared and my hair has grown out." MRS. J. G. BROWN, Brantford, Ontario.

"I was all run down and had no appetite. I had a tired feeling all the time. I was advised to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I did so and it benefited me so much that I would not be without it." MRS. G. I. BURNETT, Central Norton, N. B.

A CROW FROM BAY STREET.

The young nation makers of the Mail and Empire gave expression to a startling syllogism this morning. Here it is:

(1) Two cent postage (continental) is due to the persistence of the independent press.

(2) The Mail and Empire has been persistent in asking for two-cent postage.

Ergo (a) The Mail is the Independent press; (b) The Mail brought about two cent postage.

We say to the Mail: Pish! Tush! Likewise, Pooh! Bah! Also, Go to! and Avaunt!—Toronto Star.

REDUCED POSTAGE PROVIDED FOR.

After clamouring for months for reduction of postage from one to three cents, the Mail and Empire now jeers at the boon when it is given, and says it will mean a deficit of three quarters of a million. Under the regime of its party, the organ was so accustomed to seeing deficits that it thinks there will be the same result now. There may not be a strict balance between revenue and expenditure in post office administration, but the conditions likely to arise have been provided for. Referring to this possibility of a deficit the Montreal Herald says:

Mr. Mulock and his colleagues of the Dominion Liberal Cabinet have evidently taken heart from the unvarying success of their projects. Everything they have done has turned out well. A few years ago had a Conservative Minister been asked to do what Mr. Mulock has done, he would have declined on the ground of a certain deficiency. With Mr. Mulock's businesslike administration there is hope in business circles that even this may not happen, and even if it does, there is general confidence that the excellent state of the general revenues of the country will more than make it up. Mr. Mulock will, besides, have the knowledge that should there be a deficit, the cost to the country will have been legitimately spent on a good work, and not wasted in improvident salaries, as a few years ago it would have been.

The Mail is utterly unfair and cross-grained in its treatment of public questions, and the party can truthfully parody Mr. Mulock's Imperial stamp motto, and say—

"We boast a baser organ than has been."

THE Toronto World with a frankness that does it credit, gives a due meed to Hon. Mr. Mulock and the Government for recent improvements in Post Office management. The World remarks: "The World has no hesitation in giving our Government, and especially Mr. Mulock, credit for the great improvements made and being made in the Canadian post-office. A two-cent Imperial and domestic letter rate is a substantial improvement. So is the postal note for the transmission of money. The administration of the department has also been advanced in the direction of economy and greater efficiency. There is still other work to be done, and the Minister who has done so much need not yet abate his hand. The general public, and especially business men, will appreciate the reduction in the domestic letter rate. We believe the net result of it will be to increase the earnings of the post-office."

NEW YEAR'S RECEPTION.

Held by the Y.M.C.A. Monday.

The annual New Year's reception to the young men of Peterborough tendered by the Young Men's Christian Association in their handsome building Monday passed off quite successfully.

All the afternoon and evening the parlours and reception room were thronged with interested young men.

The Bible class room was devoted to the Camera Club exhibit, where a large number of excellent specimens were shown. Those who took part were Miss Madge Davidson and Messrs. Chas. D. Mathias, A. C. McCallum, Hamilton Hall, P. Crossley, J. McLean, Jas. McLeod, W. Moodie Hamilton, A. Laing and Fred Roy.

In the boys room Mr. Samuel Firman exhibited an excellent collection of his own work in wood carving, together with a collection of curios. Here also was the Academy of Design, which was the subject of much merriment. Some 35 views were shown. The most amusing was "Rotten Row," which was a line of rotten apples. "A Donkey behind the Times" was a looking glass placed behind the Times newspaper. The observer readily saw the point. Other amusing features were shown.

An exciting game of basket ball was included in the features of the programme for the afternoon.

In the parlour chess and checkers came into good service, while Messrs. Pidgeon, Hall, Grey and Miss Sherin rendered a number of lively musical selections.

Mr. B. Anderson very cleverly manipulated the phonograph.

A hearty informal sing wound up the programme for the afternoon.

The Ladies Auxiliary served refreshments to all in the ladies' room.

Mrs. Hall was assisted by a good deputation of ladies.

In the evening Association hall was well filled, when Prof. D. M. Barton gave an athletic exhibition. Everyone who attended was well pleased with the entertainment.

Mr. Williamson introduced Mr. Barton as an example of what Y.M.C.A. work would do for a man physically.

Mr. Barton then gave the following programme:

Instrumental selection—Selected.
A talk on exercise. Our Education. Education of the Greeks. Great men who have exercised.
D M Barton.

Success comes to those who persevere. If you take Hood's Sarsaparilla faithfully and persistently you will surely be benefitted.

A PRESENTATION.

An Ashburnham Young Lady Honoured

The Cashel Sunday school, North Hastings, held a most successful entertainment during Xmas week, from which was raised a goodly sum to be used in the interests of the church. At the close of the programme Miss Nellie Courtney, teacher of the public school in the section, was invited to the platform to be presented with a beautifully bound volume of Rev. H. Crossley's "Practical Talks on Improved Themes," and the following address:—

CASHEL, Dec. 23rd, 1898.

Miss Eleanor Courtney:

DEAR FRIEND,—We your friends of Cashel wish to present you with this address as a slight token of appreciation of your many kindnesses conferred upon us and our young people ever since your coming amongst us, and we heartily regret that the time of your departure is so near. We hereby extend to you our sincere thanks for lending an helping hand to us in our church work and sabbath school, of which you were the teacher of the infant class, of great proficiency. And it seems to us that your stay amongst us is altogether too short. We have learned much from your Godly example and precepts and your thoughtfulness for the wellbeing of others. We feel it a duty, as well as an unbounded pleasure to thank you for your interest in our League, Sabbath School and church generally; and may the influences which you have exerted in the day school, as well as the Sabbath school, have a lasting beneficial result upon our hearts and lives. We shall remember with kindly feelings the many pleasant and profitable hours which we have spent with you, both in the public means of grace and in our homes, and we trust that the guiding hand of Providence will guide you in the paths of usefulness and peace and success in your future field of labours.

IN PETERBOROUGH.

Mr. J. M. Donovan Tells how Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Him.

Peterborough, Dec. 26.—This town is famed throughout the Dominion as the most go-ahead, progressive, wealthy and up-to-date on the continent. This reputation is thoroughly deserved, and was earned by the quickness of the residents to see and to take advantage of a "good thing" when it comes our way.

One especially good thing that our people have benefitted by is the king of kidney cures—Dodd's Kidney Pills—a household remedy in Peterborough.

Among those cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills is Mr. J. M. Donovan, who reports that this remedy cured him completely of Urinary troubles, indicating the first stage of Diabetes.

Dodd's Kidney Pills are the only remedy that has ever been known to cure this disease. They never fail.

To Push Canadian Tobacco.

Toronto, Jan. 4.—Mr. C. C. James of the Department of Agriculture has received word that Mr. J. W. Wigle of Ruthven has been appointed by the Essex Tobacco Growers' Association as a representative to go to England and endeavor to find a market for their tobacco. Last year Essex had 5,086 acres and Kent 2,140 acres of tobacco, the two counties producing over 10,000,000 pounds of tobacco. A farmer from the region reports everyone wild about tobacco, the barns being full of it, and every little spare patch of ground being planted with tobacco. This year the acreage is 7,871, 7,286 in Essex and Kent, 5,086 in the former and 2,140 in the latter.

Mrs. Axel Kjer, of Gordonville, Cape Girardeau Co., Mo., writes: "When I look at my little boy I feel it my duty to write you. Perhaps someone will see my testimony and be led to use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and be blessed in the same way. This is my fifth child and the only one born alive; the others have died from lack of nourishment — so the doctor said. I was not sickly in any way and this time I just thought I would try your 'Prescription.' I took nine bottles and to my surprise it carried me through and gave us as fine a little boy as ever was. Weighed ten and one-half pounds. He is now five months old, has never been sick a day, and is so strong that everybody who sees him wonders at him. He is so playful and holds himself up so well. I would like to see this in print for so many have asked me, 'Do you think those are the testimonials of the people, or has Dr. Pierce just made them up and printed them?'" to be the greatest of all medicines for the cure of diseases and disorders of the organs distinctly feminine. It is the only preparation of its kind devised by a regularly graduated physician—an experienced and skilled specialist in the diseases of women.

It is a safe medicine in any condition of the system. It contains no whisky, alcohol, opium or other narcotic, and therefore, does not cause a craving for stimulants. It is sold by medicine dealers everywhere, and any dealer who hasn't it can get it. Don't take a substitute. No counterfeit is as good as the genuine and the druggist who says something else is "just as good as Dr. Pierce's" is either mistaken or is trying to deceive you for his own selfish benefit. WESTWOOD.

From our Own Correspondent.

At the last meeting of Westwood Court, I. O. F., No. 793, the following resolution of condolence was tendered Bro. Arthur Elmhirst:

Mr. Arthur Elmhirst, Jermyn, Ont.:

DEAR BROTHER,—The angel of death has removed from your home your beloved wife and as brother Foresters we take this opportunity of extending to you our heartfelt sympathy and condolence in this your hour of deep affliction and trial, and trust that you may find comfort and consolation in Him, whose sympathy is far greater than any earthly friends. Things are booming at the Butter Co's. factory just now. On Wednesday nearly four hundred pounds of butter was made. The company has sold nearly all their butter in Montreal at the highest prices. Their butter is becoming so well known that the demand cannot be supplied. Farmers having milk to sell would do well to take it to the factory.

People of this town greatly stirred up over the many cases of recovery from severe Heart and Nerve Troubles.

The cure of Mr. J. Currie, the well-known blacksmith causing a great deal of comment.

Mr. J. Currie, the well known brawny blacksmith of that town suffered greatly from palpitation of the heart and shortness of breath.

This is his story of how he was cured:

"For three years something has gone wrong with my heart What it was I did not know, but it caused me great suffering from palpitation and shortness of breath When I started to do anything in a hurry the trouble became a great deal worse. During the last three years I have taken a number of different medicines for heart trouble; but nothing did me any good, until I fortunately commenced taking Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, which I got at E. R Carpenter's Drug Store Three boxes cured me, making my heart act in a healthy and natural manner, and restoring me to my former state of vigorous health. I am no longer annoyed with palpitation or shortness of breath and can heartily say that Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills cannot be excelled as a medicine for all nerve and heart troubles. This is my own experience, and I recommend these pills to all who suffer as I did."

Canadian Gas Admitted Free.

Washington, Jan. 4.—Justice Peckham yesterday handed down the opinion of the United States Supreme Court in the case of the United States v. The Buffalo Natural Gas & Fuel Company, appealed by the United States from the decision of the Circuit of Appeals for the second Circuit. The case involved the right of the gas company to import gas from Canada by means of pipes under the Niagara River free of duty. The opinion classifies natural gas as crude bitum, and has the effect of admitting it free of duty under the tariff law of 1890, and also under the present law.

DEADLY CATARRH

has fastened its relentless grip upon some member of nearly every family in the land. Competent authorities estimate that from eighty to ninety per cent. of the entire population of this continent suffer from some form of this repulsive and dangerous malady. If you or any of your family suffer either from recognized catarrh or from the lingering colds which mark its early stages—don't trifle with it. It is the precursor of consumption and death.

Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder

never fails. It is the remedy of all remedies, endorsed by the most experienced and eminent nose and throat specialists of the day, and having a record of a multitude of radical, permanent cures of chronic cases which had been declared incurable. It also cures cold in the head, influenza, hay fever, loss of smell, deafness, sore throat, tonsilitis, asthma and all similar diseases. It is delightful to use.

"I have had chronic catarrh ever since the war," says J. C. Taylor, of 210 N. Clinton Ave., Trenton, N. J. "I had despaired of ever being cured. I used three bottles of Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder and my catarrh has entirely left me." Rev. C. E. Whitcombe, rector of St. Matthew's Episcopal Church, Hamilton, Ont., was a great sufferer. He used Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder, and now proclaims it a safe, simple and certain cure. The Lord Bishop of Toronto, Can., recommends the remedy over his own signature. Sold by druggists.

A NEW INVENTION
The Newcombe Piano Has It.

It consists of a Patented Practice CLAVIER or STOP which diminishes the tone when required and saves wear on the Piano; it also does away with the old way of having to press down the pedal with the foot in order to soften the tone when running the scales or practicing. Oftentimes the young pupil on the piano cannot press down on the pedal without throwing themselves out of the proper position when they should sit erect. This invention in the NEWCOMBE PIANO will enable children to begin two years earlier on the piano. In addition to the above, the NEWCOMBE PIANO is the finest made in Canada. Children often complain about practicing; they like it if they have a NEWCOMBE PIANO. 1898 styles are gems of art, containing every late improvement; they possess that beautiful full sweet tone which delights the singer, and so pleases every musical ear. Organs of every description at Wholesale Prices.

Big Bargains now on hand in slightly used. Upright and Square Pianos of the various makes taken in part exchange for the famous NEWCOMBE PIANOS. SIR WILFRID AT MONTREAL.

Senate Reform by a Joint Vote in Cases of Conflict.

THE CHANGE IS REQUIRED.

Legislation Blocked by an Irresponsible Body—The Negotiations at Washington—Mr. Fielding's Speech Reveals Canada's Prosperity—The Surplus Is Nearly a Million and Three-Quarters.

Montreal, Jan. 4.—A big and enthusiastic Liberal rally was held in the Monument Nationale last night. It was organized by the Club Nationale to celebrate the Liberal victories in recent bye-elections, and resolved itself into a farewell demonstration towards Sir Wilfrid on the eve of his departure for Washington. The immense hall was crowded, and though the speaking was not over until 11.30 few left before that time. The chair was occupied by Mr. J. A. Drouin, the president of the club, and the gathering, which included many Ministers, was a most distinguished one.

The Premier.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier met with a perfect ovation on rising. He spoke of the reforms which his Government had carried out during their two years of office, instancing the settlement of the Manitoba school question, the inauguration of the preferential tariff, the reduction in postage, the extension of the Intercolonial, the attempt to capture the Yukon trade by the Stikine Railway scheme, etc. With regard to this last point, he showed that the Government's effort had been blocked by the action of the Senate. There are other reforms still, but I want to come to those which we have not been able to complete. We tried to extend the Intercolonial to Montreal, and if there was ever a necessary measure demanded by the highest policy it was that. The idea that the Intercolonial should have a terminus in the open country had been remarked, even under the Conservative regime. I need not tell you men of business that nowadays, if a man does not go for business, business will not come to look for him. It was necessary under the circumstances that the Intercolonial Railway should come to Montreal. A bill for that purpose was introduced and passed in the House of Commons. It was defeated in the Senate. Last year we introduced a measure to build a road from Stikine to Teslin. Gentlemen, we have a rich and fertile country, but we did not know the extent of our riches and resources until recent years. We did not know that under the snows and the ice of the land of the midnight sun there were deposits of gold greater than those of Australia and California. Until the gold discoveries in the Yukon it had been imagined that gold was to be found in many countries only. It was indispensable to have a line of communication with the Klondike. We presented a measure, of which the wisdom must be apparent to every man who thinks; we proposed a measure by which to give us that railway, and that railway would not have cost a single cent to the Canadian taxpayer. Our policy was that the Yukon should pay for the Yukon. If our railway had been built last winter we should now be in a position to have extended it, and next summer we would have had a line of railway to the Yukon River, and controlled the whole commerce of that country.

Reform of the Senate.

But, thanks to the senseless action of the Senate, you merchants of Montreal have lost the trade of the Yukon, which is now handled at Seattle and other United States ports on the Pacific coast. What shall we do with the Senate? (A voice—Abolish it.) What has to be done with the Senate is to reform it. (Cheers.) The time has come when we must occupy ourselves with that question of the reform of the Senate. Gentlemen, I heard someone say that we should suppress the Senate. It is not my opinion. I am not in favor of suppressing the Senate. I am in favor of a double Legislature in a country like ours. If I was like my friend, Mr. Marchand, Prime Minister of the Province of Quebec, I should be, like him, in favor of the abolition of the Legislative Council, but there is a great difference between the Province of Quebec and the Confederation of seven provinces which forms the Dominion of Canada. In a country of different elements and interests like ours, where so many interests are at stake, where so many passions may come into conflict, I think a second Chamber is a necessary safeguard. I am much less of a radical now than I was when I was much younger. Formerly I was for the abolition of the Senate, but as I grow older and learn more of the country my radical ideas have become modified. I do not say that I am a Bleu—(laughter)—but I have acquired conservative ideas in the broadest sense of the word, and I believe that we should not suppress but reform the Senate. The reason I think the Senate should be reformed is that it is an irresponsible body, and an irresponsible body under our constitution is a complete anomaly. In England there is no irresponsible body. The Sovereign is not irresponsible. The House of Lords is not irresponsible. The House of Commons is not irresponsible. The power of the Sovereign is limited, because the House of Commons has the right to refuse supplies. Frequently in history the House of Commons has refused grants of money in order to bring the Sovereign to respect the popular will. The power of the House of Commons is limited by the people. If it is disposed to act arbitrarily or to override popular rights the Sovereign can dismiss it. The House of Lords is not absolute, because the Sovereign has always the right to increase the number of its members. In 1832, when the great Reform bill was passed and rotten boroughs were abolished, the House of Lords cast out the bill when it was first sent to them. On its being presented the second time they were about to repeat their action when they learned that the Sovereign had decided to appoint a sufficient number of new Peers to change the majority, and the House of Lords gave in. (Cheers.)

The Senate's Position.

But what the House of Lords could not do the Senate of Canada has done. The Senate of Canada as constituted can ignore all the bodies in the State, and cannot be obliged to submit to the popular will except by compulsion, and we want no revolution in this country. Our only course, then, is to reform the Senate by limiting its powers and subjecting it to some control. Now, what will this control be? It is a question of the greatest delicacy and difficulty. Shall we make the Senate elective? I am not in favor of that system. We have but one electoral body in this country, and it is represented by the House of Commons. An elective Senate would simply mean the doubling of the power of the electoral body. The reform we could make will leave the Senators the same in number as they are to-day, namely, 82, and the mode of appointment the same. The reform we propose is this: when there is a conflict between the Senate and the popular House, then there should be a joint vote, and the majority should carry. (Cheers.) That, gentlemen, is the reform that we have to propose to the people of Canada. When that question has received sufficient attention from the electorate, the electorate will see its wisdom and moderation. I wish to govern this as a constitutional country, that all the bodies of the State shall be subjected to the control of the electorate; that there shall be nobody in the State that shall be above the law, and beyond the control of the popular will. The majority are sometimes mistaken, but when an appeal is made to the common sense, the sentiment of justice and of equity of the people at large, I have confidence that justice, equity and common sense will prevail in the end.

Negotiations at Washington.

It is my intention to leave commercial matters largely to be dealt with by other speakers, but you desire, no doubt, to hear a word about the negotiations at Washington. On that point I cannot give much information, but let me tell you one thing; For long our relations with the United States have not been such as they ought to have been. I am a patriot, I hope; I love my country; but I have never believed that to be a patriot, to love one's country, one should hate other countries. I love my country, but I do not conceal the fact that I have an ardent admiration for our neighbors. I believe the American people one of the great, one of the greatest, nations of the earth, and I do not see why between two such peoples there should not be enough cordial understanding to enable them to act fairly by each other. We have gone to Washington to settle the difficulties between ourselves and our neighbors. We shall try, as the English say, by giving and taking. Treaties cannot be made without mutual concessions, but I believe when I shall return, whatever I have obtained, I shall have sacrificed nothing of the dignity of our country. (Loud cheers.) I have but one word to add, and let me address it to the young people of the Club Nationale. The interests they have to defend are so great, so vast, so lofty, that they should never descend to the petty quarrels by which the politics of our country can be brought into disgrace. Let their hearts be above all considerations of persons. Let them be too patriotic to think to search out the defects of this one or that one with the aid of the microscope. Let them get to work and let their sole thought be the development, the future and the prosperity of our common country. (Cheers.)

Hon. Messrs. Fielding and Tarte also spoke, dealing particularly with their departments, the Ministry of Finance and the Ministry of Public Works. Mr. Fielding announced that last year's revenue exceeded, for the first time in Canada's history, $40,000,000, and that the surplus over expenditure, was in net figures $1,-723,719.33.

Considerable Selling of Wheat Despite the Big Decrease in Visible Supply—The Prices.

Tuesday Evening, Jan. 3.

Liverpool wheat futures to-day advanced ¼d per cental over Saturday's close.

Chicago futures, after showing some early strength, closed 1⅝c below Saturday's final figures. There was considerable bullish news, such as a decrease of 1,800,000 bushels in the American visible for the past week, good clearances and bad weather in Argentina, but all this had little effect.

Visible and Afloat.

As compared with a week ago, the visible supply of wheat in Canada and the United States has decreased 1,890,000 bushels; that of corn has increased 426,000 bushels, and that of oats has decreased 129,000 bushels.

To recapitulate, the visible supply of wheat in Canada and the United States, together with that afloat for Europe, is 53,-787,000 bushels, against 55,263,000 bushels a week ago.

Dr. A. W. Chase's Ointment...

Endorsed by Dr. C. M. Harlan of the American Journal of Health

NOT A PATENT MEDICINE. . .

He says:—Among the proprietary medicines recognized is Dr. Chase's Ointment, compounded by Dr. A. W. Chase Medicine Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto, as a remedy for Piles, Eruptions and Eczematic Skin Diseases, for which it has been used with marked success and has effected remarkable cures. It is not the practice of the Medical Profession indiscriminately to use proprietary medicines, but there are hundreds of physicians throughout this country who are using Dr. Chase's Ointment in their practice. We handed out during the last month 2,700 boxes of free samples of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and the thankful results have been something astonishing. Here is what one of the cures says:

MR. O. P. ST. JOHN, 246 Shaw St., Toronto, in his letter states: I suffered for some years from Itching Piles, at times being unable to sleep for the annoyance caused by them. After trying almost every remedy known, I was induced to try Dr. Chase's Ointment, and can say one box entirely cured me. I cannot speak too highly of it, and have recommended it to several of my friends, all whom have been cured by its use.

"IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY."

To Wm. McCabe, Esq., Managing Director, North American Life Assurance Co., Toronto:

DEAR SIR,—Your official notice came duly to hand, apprising me of the results obtainable upon my 15 year endowment Policy in your Company for $1,000, which matured on the 5th inst. Of the various options you have given me viz.:

Cash value	$1,564 96
Paid-up Policy, payable at my death, for	2,560 00
Yearly Income for life of	166 20

I have decided upon the cash value; and it gives me pleasure to testify that, as I anticipated it would be when I took out the policy, IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY. This returns me the full premiums of the 15 years and over 4½ per cent. compound interest, in addition to which you have carried the risk upon my life. In view of the lowering rates of interest which have been obtainable during the latter portion of the period, it is difficult to see how this excellent result could have been surpassed.

Yours sincerely,

To the Public.

The Peterborough Steam Laundry and Shirt Company (Limited), have sold their entire steam plant, machinery, good will and business to Mr. Alfred Parker, of the Peterborough Dye Works, the late manager, and he will hereafter personally conduct and control the same. This steam laundry has the newest and most modern improvements, and is one of the best equipped in Ontario. In thanking the public for their past patronage, we recommend Mr. Parker as a progressive laundry man, and possessing a laundry plant with the latest and most improved facilities for fine laundry work. All outstanding accounts due the laundry must be settled by Feb. 1st, 1899. 6-2d

The Drawing Card.

No such opportunity has occurred for years to procure dress goods, staple dry goods and millinery of the same quality at such reasonable prices as that afforded by Messrs. R. H. Kells & Co.'s closing-out sale. In fact it is the "drawing card" of the season in this line. An imperative necessity exists for clearing the entire stock without delay on account of the firm deciding to retire from business. Cost price and even lower will not be a barrier to this sale. Holiday gift bargains is also stimulating this sale, and crowds of ladies find much that is appropriate for Christmas presents as well as regular wants. eodw

BECK IN MORE TROUBLE.

A Watch Found in his Possession was Stolen at Cardinal During the Summer.

At the time Thos. Beck was committed to the Central Priron for two years for the theft of a watch from J. W. Butcher, he had a watch in his possession which he was very anxious to turn over to his friend, Mrs. Allan.

When the Chief of Police refused to give up the time-piece Beck waxed wroth and threatened all kinds of things. The chief, however, expressed the opinion that it was stolen and announced his determination to keep it until he was satisfied who was its rightful owner.

The story which Beck told about the watch coming into his possession was found to be false and the chief quietly began to trace the man's wanderings down along the Iroquois canal. From Prescott he learned that Charles Jones, of Cardinal, had lost a watch whilst Beck was working there, and on getting the description and number of the timepiece it was found to correspond exactly with the one in the Chief's possession, so it was returned to its owner.

Beck will probably be re-arrested on completing his present term to answer to the charge of stealing this watch.

THREE SHOTS WERE FIRED AT A BURGLAR.

APPARENTLY HE ESCAPED THE BULLETS.

Mr. T. W. Martin's Residence on Stewart Street was Burglarized Last Evening—Entrance was Obtained Through a Window.

At about half-past three this morning the residents in the neighbourhood of Hunter and Stewart streets were awakened and greatly startled by hearing a revolver fired rapidly three times in succession.

The shots were fired by Mr. T. W. Martin, Stewart street, at a burglar who was escaping from the house after having pried open a window on the north side and entered the premises.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin were awakened by hearing a noise in the house at about three o'clock and Mr. Martin rising searched the premises down to the cellar. Finding nothing, he again composed himself to sleep, but was reawakened by Mrs. Martin who again detected strange sounds in the house. After listening for a time they noticed the flash of a dark lantern on the ceiling of the hall below. Mr. Martin quietly walked out on the landing and could discern the lantern being flashed about the lower floor, although he could not distinguish the man who carried it. Running into his bedroom he began searching for his revolver, and whilst doing so, alarmed the burglar. Expecting that the intruder would depart by the back door, Mr. Martin took up a position at a rear window upstairs. The burglar, however, sprang out of a side window through which he had obtained entrance into the house, and he was not observed until he was seen running across the street. Then it was that Mr. Martin fired the three shots at him, but apparently without effect.

An examination of the premises revealed the fact that entrance had been gained as stated, through the window and it is thought that at the time Mr. Martin searched the house in the first place, the burglar was concealed in the pantry. This was the only place he did not examine.

Officer Stewart on arriving on the scene examined the window and found the footprint of a very large boot in the snow beneath it. The man must have stood on the fence when he was working at the window.

Had Mr. Martin been in possession of his revolver when he noticed the lantern flashing in the hall below he thinks he could easily have winged his man.

BANK OF COMMERCE MEDAL

Another One to be Given to the Peterborough Central Exhibition Association.

The Canadian Bank of Commerce again offers a handsome medal for competition to be awarded at the spring show. It will be similar to the one donated last year to the Fall Exhibition, which was so much appreciated by the farmers. The farming community and the Bank of Commerce have mutual interests, and it is to the credit of the bank that they have demonstrated their interests so substantially by donating these beautiful prizes. The Bank of Commerce has been the first to recognize the claims of the farming community for the promotion of the agricultural interest. Later on it will be made known for which competition the medal will be awarded.

THE BAND'S GRATITUDE.

The Acknowledgment of Handsome Contributions to the Funds of the 57th Battalion Band.

The Fifty-seventh Battalion Band, in view of securing the services of a new bandmaster and new instruments, has made a decided improvement in its efficiency of performance. Much to the satisfaction of many of the persons the band has discontinued the practice of its annual serenades at the residences of the citizens during the holiday season. In order to supply the deficiency arising from the discontinuance of this practice and for the necessity of funds for current expenses and to keep its instrumentation and supply of music up to the mark, the band decided to appeal directly to the citizens and have met with a liberal response. The officers feel that the public appreciate the recent improvement in the playing of the band and, having faith in the possibility of still further advancement, are willing to assist with the means necessary to its proper equipment with instruments and music in gaining still greater efficiency. The band desires gratefully to acknowledge the following donations to its funds:

RETIRING FROM BUSINESS.

The Long Established Business of Fairweather & Co. Decides to "Pull up Stakes."

By advertisement elsewhere it will be seen that Messrs. J. W. T. Fairweather & Co. are retiring from business in Peterborough in order to consolidate the energy and capital of the local business with the Toronto business (J. & J. Lugsdin). The matter has been rather suddenly decided upon and as the retirement takes place on Feb. 15th it will be seen that the large stock in the local store must be cleared out and prices will naturally be fixed so as to effect a clearance at the date mentioned. The retirement of this firm from town will make an undesirable blank in the business houses of George street. "Fairweather's Corner" has been a local landmark for about 35 years, Mr. Fairweather, sr., having been in business in that stand some twenty years and the present firm about sixteen years. It is to be regretted that a business that has so long been associated with the town should leave us, but business reasons are more powerful than sentiment and as the object of business is to make money, the conditions that most largely conduce to this end must be accepted.

REGULAR MEETING BOARD OF EDUCATION.

ASHBURNHAM FEES NOT TO BE REDUCED.

Reports Received From Committees—Statement of Receipts and Expenditures.

At the monthly meeting of the Board of Education, held last evening, there were present Messrs. P. Hamilton, chairman; Jas. Stevenson, W. B. Bamford, Dr. Caldwell, Henry Denne, L. M. Hayes, Robt. Fair, W. G. Ferguson, J. J. McBain, Jas. Edgecumb and W. H. Hill.

Mr. Peter Hamilton reported having conferred with the committee appointed to consider the matter of admitting students from Ashburnham to the Collegiate Institute at a reduced rate. It had been decided that no reduction of the rate of $150 a year could be made. This sum was agreed on some eight years ago.

A COMMUNICATION

from the secretary of the Children's Aid Society was read as follows:—

Mr. Peter Hamilton, Chairman Board of Education:

DEAR SIR,—In response to a request by the President and Board of Management of the Children's Aid Society, I beg to tender to you, the chairman of the Board of Education, and to your associates, our sincere thanks, not only for the previous contribution which, through you, the teachers and pupils of the Public schools and Collegiate Institute made to the Christmas festival of our society, but for the spirit of kind sympathy and appreciation of the work of the society, such a contribution evinced.

That the memory of the happy evening was not the only benefit the poor of the town obtained from the festival, will be made clear by the fact that, in addition to large quantities of clothing, thirty-three pairs of boots and shoes were distributed among the boys and girls of a school age in town and its neighbourhood. The permanent value of such a work will be evident to all; in fitting toys for school, we are saving them from crime.

Again thanking you very warmly for your great kindness in this matter, I am, dear sir,

Yours very sincere,
M. R. CLARKE,
Sec'y Children's Aid Society.

REPORT OF SUPERVISION COMMITTEE

The Supervision Committee reported as follows through its chairman, Dr. Caldwell:

GENTLEMEN,—With regard to the communication from the High School, Port Hope, asking this board to join with them in making representation to the Educational Department, re the undue severity of the senior leaving examinations of 1898—

We recommend that no action be taken.

The communication from the Board of Health calling the attention of the Board to section 16, of the act respecting vaccination, was discussed, and we advise that no action be taken.

The circula from the Educational Department, explaining how High School cadet Corps may be formed, military instruction imparted, and the regulations and conditions upon which any grant is paid, was considered. The committee is favourably impressed with the matter. We therefore recommend that the Board discuss the matter thoroughly as to the advisability of forming such a cadet corps in connection with our Collegiate Institute.

The items of the Inspector's report, which required the special consideration of the committee, were:—Vacating the room in Central School, occupied by Junior Part I, and removing a class to the unoccupied room in the George street school; shorter hours for the junior classes, and the introduction of teaching music into our Public School programme.

The committee were in doubt as to the advisability of making any change in the rooms before Easter or summer holidays; but recommend that this matter be referred to the Property Committee with power to act, when they think it expedient.

We recommend that all junior classes be dismissed at 11.30 a. m. and 3.30 p. m., and that where the number enrolled in this grade exceeds 50 that the junior subdivisions of this grade be dismissed as the morning and afternoon intermission, as suggested in the report.

Your committee quite agree with the report, as to the value of music as a means of aesthetic culture and of its most desirable "recreative influence." We much regret that so few of our teachers are able to avail themselves of such a cheerful and invigorating influence, which we think would be of mutual advantage to teachers and pupils. But while we recognize the desirability of having such music taught to all the classes in our public schools, we do not deem it advisable to submit any definite plan for the adoption by the board, for different reasons, one of which would be the expense incurred. We recommend that the Inspectors insist that all teachers devote a short time to music.

We also recommend that the Inspector prepare a scheme in detail for the teaching of music into our school programme, and report to the board at an early date.

All of which is respectfully submitted.
W. CALDWELL,
Chairman Supervision Committee.

The report was adopted.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE REPORT.

A special committee reported as follows though Mr. J. J. McBain:

GENTLEMEN,—Your special committee appointed to deal with the offering to the Children's Aid Society, beg leave to report that the contributions made by the Public schools and staff amounted to $83.25, by the Collegiate Institute pupils and members of the staff, $17, making a total offering from our Public Schools and Institute of $100.25, which has been handed over to the Secretary of the Children's Aid Society.

Your Committee consider this very satisfactory, more particularly when the effort was entirely voluntary on the part of the teachers and pupils. We feel confident that the Children's Aid Society will appreciate the offering made in this way. A statement of the offering made by each room is submitted.

All of which is respectfully submitted.
J J MCBAIN.

The report was adopted.

FINE FURS

It is generally acknowledged that we lead in the manufacture of Fine Furs for which we have made a reputation.

The reason is simple—All members of the firm are Practical Furriers and understand their business. We do not quote prices, as prices in Furs do not count unless quality of goods can be shown, but we can and do offer you Furs cheaper than elsewhere, Quality and Finish in manufacture taken into consideration

Baby Eczema and Scald Head.

Infants and young children are peculiarly subject to this terrible disorder, and if not promptly arrested it will eventually become chronic. The first application soothes the irritation and puts the little sufferer to rest.

DEALING WITH LUMBERMEN.

Peculiar Tricks Indulged In by Both Buyer and Seller.

There is an old retired merchant in Detroit who delights in recalling his experiences when an active man running a general store in one of the northern cities of the lower peninsula.

"I used to reap a harvest when the men were coming out of the woods," he relates. "They were not up in styles, and about any old thing would suit them provided the color was right and the fit even passable. But there were tricksters among them, and I had to have my wits about me in order to keep even with them.

"'How much is that hat?' asked a strapping six footer, who arrived from camp one day with a pocketful of money.

"'Two fifty,' I replied.

"Then he informed me that he always had the crowns of his hats punched full of holes in order to keep his head cool and his hair from coming out. I soon had this attended to, and then he asked what the hat was worth. 'Two fifty,' I responded in surprise, but he laughed at me for asking such a price for damaged goods. He had me, and got his hat for $1, while the jolly crowd with him had a laugh at my expense. He wanted to look at some 'fiddles,' and after pricing one at $10 concluded to take it.

"'Where's the bow?' he asked, as I was doing up the package.

"'You only bought the fiddle,' I laughed. The others saw the point and laughed too. The giant tried to bluff me, but I kept good humored, and got even on the hat by charging him $1.50 for the bow. I not only got even, but the others were so pleased with my 'Yankee trick' that they spent plenty of money with me."—Detroit Free Press.

Mice of All Colors.

The National Mouse Club of England recently held an exhibition where several hundred mice competed for gold medals, champion cups and various other prizes. These little creatures are not the ordinary everyday mice which scare the cook and drive the mistress of the house to take refuge on a chair. They are well bred mice that expected to be petted and caressed and treated as tenderly as a pet cat or dog.

By careful breeding they have developed great variety in coloring and sometimes in shape. One very choice style of animal, called the spiny mouse, has a row of bristling hair for a spinal ornament and is a very cute miniature reproduction of a porcupine. The familiar white mice so often seen for sale on the streets here have been bred with black eyes instead of red ones. It has taken several years to produce these results, but the society now claims to be able to furnish mice in 12 or 13 different shades. To any one who is able to overcome the fear of mice they are dainty, delicate little studies at any time, but when they play around in suits of chocolate, sable, fawn, jet black, tortoise or golden agouti they become perfectly fascinating.

As in the case of all fads of this kind, the prices brought by these little pets are extremely steep. Fifteen dollars or $20 is not a large price to pay for a well bred mouse, and some of them have been sold for as high as $25.

A Judicial Ruling.

During the hearing of a case at the Bloomsbury county court counsel referred to the defendant, an Oxford master of arts, as "this man," whereupon defendant's counsel protested, saying he might at least have used the word "gentleman." Judge Bacon — Nonsense. That is the sort of affectation you often hear among women when they say "you ought to call me a lady." In my opinion man is a much better title than gentleman.—London Telegraph.

You Can't Hear It.

There are many sounds animals can hear which are inaudible to man. Mr. Galton, the famous anthropologist, has invented a little whistle with an adjustable plug, by which it can be rendered more and more shrill till it ceases to give any note to our ears, yet a dog will hear it as a whistle still and answer readily its call.

The plant known as vervain, which is not distinguished for its beauty and which grows nowadays utterly disregarded, was so sacred to the Druids that they only gathered it for their divinations when the great dog star arose, in order that neither sun nor moon should see the dead.

If you are too indolent to shingle your house during the dry weather, you have no just cause for complaint because your roof leaks when it rains.

FLOGGING IN SIBERIA

FEARFUL TORTURE TO WHICH CONVICTS ARE LIABLE.

The Story of the Mercilessly Brutal Knout as Told by a Russian Surgeon—The Worst Criminals Chosen to Wield the Lash.

Passing along a gloomy passage of the Alexander prison, whose walls are covered with black moldiness and reek with the strong scent of pine cones strewing on the floor, we find at the end of the corridor chairs and tables for the authorities who witness the infliction of the punishments. Among the officials are a lawyer, the chief of the prison and the surgeon, and a little way off is placed the "block" of threatening aspect, behind which stands the wielder of the knout, who awaits his victims with a curious look. His garb is apparently intended to make the situation all the more impressive. He wears a tall white head covering, soft felt shoes, a blood red shirt with its sleeves turned up, and he carries the knout in his hand. Along the one wall stands a row of convicts with smoothly shaved heads, and facing them is a long line of warders armed with loaded revolvers in the hand. The stillness, as of the grave, which stamps all present, is broken from time to time by the rattling of the handcuffs and the leg fetters and by a furtive cough or the rustling of the papers upon the table of the prison governor.

"Who will be the next?" is the question that is all too clearly to be read upon the deathlike features of the "arrestants."

"Sidorov" is called out by the governor in a quiet, restrained voice. Sidorov steps unsteadily and with an increasing totter and rattling of his chains out of the line of gray, long felt coats. I note his lips growing pale and the fear in his widely opened eyes, as though he were a hunted wild beast.

"Lie down!" is the command. Hastily making the sign of the cross on his breast, Sidorov lies down at length on the bench and throws each arm around it. He is then bound by leather thongs to the bench, and his hands are tied together beneath it.

"How many?" asks the warder charged with counting the strokes.

"Sixty," is the quiet answer of the governor.

"Look out," or "Pull yourself together," forms the general remark of the knout wielder, and the next moment the blows are raining in fearful thuds upon the bare back of Sidorov, who utters heart piercing shrieks. One, two, three—the warder calls aloud the tale of the stripes, every one of which hisses and leaves its mark on the culprit. The cry that at first followed every stroke has gradually become an unbroken howl and roar, and readers must have strong nerves if they can picture further all the hideousness of this diabolical form of punishment.

This sort of castigation is inflicted upon convicts whenever it is ordained by the law or by the police and local authorities. The dispenser of blows is always a fellow taken from the prisoners themselves, and in his hands the fate of the delinquent may be said literally to lie. The knout consists of a thick wooden stick, to which is fastened a strongly plaited lash, about 30 inches long and 2 inches wide, and this thong is cut so as to form three lashes at its end. A convict who retains the smallest degree of human feeling can never be induced to undertake this office, and thus only the most reprobate and hardened criminals are chosen for the dread work. To these inhuman creatures the courts of Russia intrust human life. It is in their power to inflict only light punishment upon the condemned, to make him a cripple for the rest of his days or to send him to his grave on the spot, and yet the officials never deem it necessary to put any restraint on these floggers. The experienced floggers are really skilled at their work. If they wish to show any mercy to the delinquent, they rain blows on his body with the middle part of the whip, while the cruel tips of it fall beyond the prisoner and on the bench, but if no mercy is to be given, then the knout is made to do its full purpose. In the hands of a skilled flogger the motions of the knout are so quick that they can scarcely be rightly followed by an inexperienced observer. In either case the prisoner naturally howls, but the difference in the result is very marked. The lightened form of punishment can be bought, and woe to him who is not able to propitiate the flogger.

The courts generally condemn to flogging confirmed criminals, fugitives from Siberia and vagabonds, many of whom have received altogether from 500 to 600 blows. An old Siberian tramp finished his curriculum vitae with the following words, "I have received all told 1,400 stripes of the birch and, 600 blows from the knout and numberless thrashings by sticks." As is to be expected, the statistics of the Siberian prisons show the futility of these punishments as corrective measures. In proportion as the punishments increase in number and cruelty so the relapses and backslidings into crime increase. Nostalgia, or intensified homesickness, is curiously strong in the inmates of the Siberian prisons and will not be repressed by the most cruel system of whipping.

Hitherto we have dealt only with the knout, which is the rarer form of punishment and must be ordered by a court of law. The usual corporal punishment by means of rods and sticks is somewhat different, for they form the alpha and omega of the corrective measures in use in Siberian prisons. This form of punishment is regarded rather as a bagatelle, and yet its effects are much worse than those of the knout, for it is meted out to all in the same measure. It needs not to be ordained by a court of law, and the victim undergoes no previous medical examination as to his fitness to bear the punishment. Every governor of prisons can give 30 and every district governor 100 of these blows at their sole discretion. It is the naked truth that even criminals when grievously ill do not escape this punishment. A female prisoner in the district of Korsakov was whipped to such an extent that she fell down dead.

That the governors of Siberian prisons are not all monsters, but that there are in exceptional cases kindly hearted men, is seen in the case of Sipjagin, the former director of the prison at Irkutsk. He went so far in his dauntless reforms as to entirely abolish punishment by whipping. And what was the result? The prison discipline improved astonishingly, transgressions and crimes almost ceased to be the order of the day, and attempts to escape became a thing of the past.—Vratsch, a St. Petersburg Medical Weekly.

PERMANENT CURE OF SCROFULOUS SORES.

Mrs. W. Bennet, Crewson's Corners, Ont., had 3 running sores on the neck.
B.B.B. healed them up in 1894.
They have never broken out to this day.

THE story of Mrs. Bennet's cure of Scrofula, is simply another of those remarkable instances where Burdock Blood Bitters has not only been the means of giving relief for the time, but has made a cure, so effective and permanent that after the lapse of five years there has been no sign of the disease returning.

Scrofula is one of the hardest diseases to cure, and scrofulous sores the hardest to heal. It is so malignant and deep seated in its nature, that ordinary medicines and ordinary doctors' treatment are of little benefit.

Burdock Blood Bitters, though, even in these worst diseases, does not fail those who put their confidence in it, and those with ailments less malignant and less severe in their nature, need surely not hesitate to use B.B.B., as if it can conquer diseases of such a nature it can surely not fail to cure those of less severity.

This is the letter Mrs. W. Bennet wrote in the year 1894:

"After having used Burdock Blood Bitters for Scrofula in the blood, I feel it my duty to make known the results. I was treated by a skilled physician, but he failed to cure me. I had 3 running sores on my neck, which could not be healed until I tried B.B.B., which healed them completely, leaving the skin and flesh sound and whole.

MRS. W. BENNET.

"As long as I live I shall speak of the virtues of B.B.B., and I feel grateful to Providence that such a medicine is provided for sufferers."

MRS. W. BENNET.

The following is the letter written July 1st, 1898:

"I have not had a sore or any signs of running from my neck since I wrote an account of my case in 1894.

"I have better health since than I had for ten years before it. Burdock Blood Bitters saved me from an early grave.

"When the doctor was attending me my friends and neighbors came looking for my death every day.

"If you doubt what I say write to my neighbor, Mrs. Morgan, or Mrs. John Cripps. She waited on me for two weeks, and see what she will say about my case. They have told the community I had risen from the grave.

"My case has been the means of selling hundreds of bottles of B.B.B. in the villages of Acton and Rockwood. I am yet sounding its name wherever I get the chance, and will so long as I live.

"Any one who wants to hear what B.B.B. has done for me, let them write to me and I will answer them.

"I thank God for such a medicine for the sick."

The documents forwarded him by the Court of Cassation reached him on Dec. 28, and his replies will be mailed by the steamer leaving Jan. 3."

A Woman's Crime.

A THRILLING STORY OF LOVE AND ADVENTURE.

By LAWRENCE M. LYNCH.

Author of "John Arthur's Ward," "The Diamond Coterie," "Against Odds," Etc., Etc.

In her green and glittering boudoir, the lovely heiress of the Durand wealth reclines upon a satin-covered couch, that is drawn forward to catch the warmth from a glowing grate fire. The room is brilliantly illuminated, not with the too glaring gas, but with the soft light from many wax candles, that are upheld by numerous costly and quaint candelabra. Aura Durand is a thorough sybarite, and she knows better than to mar the green loveliness of her maiad's grotto with the cold glare of the gas jets. She has not left her couch all day, and her silly little maid has been kept constantly at her side. No one else has been admitted to her room. Hours have passed since the body of the murdered bridegroom was discovered, and the entire city has rung with the news, but it has not penetrated to the boudoir of Aura Durand. Neither is she aware of the scene of last night and of the flight of Lenore. Fussy, fidgety, nervous little Mrs. Durand could not tell her; tender-hearted Mr. Durand would not; so it has been delegated to Miss Annin to break to her the news. Mrs. Durand has kept her room all day, only sending to ask after Aura, and Mr. Durand has only presented himself long enough to make the regulation enquiries, and since has kept aloof from the feminine portion of the house.

"Aura is so sensitive," he says, "and she and poor Arteveldt were such good friends. It will be a shock to her."

Perhaps Miss Annin also feared the shock to Miss Durand's nerves; at all events, she had held herself aloof from Aura all that day, and at ten o'clock at night her task of disagreeable news breaking is yet to be accomplished. Perhaps Miss Annin is one of those conscientious young ladies who can not sleep leaving a duty unperformed. For, now, late as is the hour, she enters the green boudoir, without knocking, and unannounced. An expression of annoyance flits across the face of the invalid, and then she says, with almost her usual calm:—

"Oh, it's you! Where have you been all day?"

Miss Annin crosses the room in her easy fashion, and seats herself comfortably where she can have a full view of the invalid's face.

"I've been—making a mental calculation," she replies, coolly. "Isn't Laura tired?" with a meaning glance; "she looks as if it would do her good to run down to the kitchen and get a cup of tea. You had better go, Laura."

For a moment it would seem that Laura's mistress will countermand this advice, which amounts to an order. Then she seems to reconsider, and says, languidly:—"You may go, Laura—for a little while."

Laura murmurs her thanks, and is glad to go, and for a moment Miss Durand and her companion eye each other in silence; a silence which Miss Annin is the first to break.

"How is your poor ankle?" she asks, with mocking solicitude. The invalid stirs impatiently, but vouchsafes no answer, asking a question instead.

"Have you been out to-day?"

"No," carelessly.

"What! You are taking things quietly. I thought you were getting impatient."

"So I was. I have had other things to occupy me to-day."

Miss Durand eyes her coldly.

"If you have anything to say you had better say it," she says, with a half sneer.

"What a queer girl you are," with an affectation of intense astonishment. "If I have anything to say! Don't you want to hear about the wedding?"

"No," shutting her eyes as if the light hurt them.

"But it was a very strange one."

"No matter."

"Such a finale!"

Miss Durand says nothing; her face looks very white under the wax lights.

"And such a furore as it created. No one ever before saw such a demoniac-looking bride. And then—her horrible revenge."

Aura Durand lifts her head suddenly.

"What are you talking about?" she cries, almost wildly.

"About the bride who denounced her husband, and ran away on her wedding night. About the beautiful demon who is missing two hours after the wedding, and who can not be found, although she has left a terrible 'farewell' behind her."

Aura Durand sits erect, her face is fairly livid.

"Ran away! Missing!" she almost shrieks. "What do you mean? Explain, instantly, instantly!"

"Then don't glare at me so wildly. I am not the awful bride. Lie down, and don't excite yourself. You will only injure your foot moving so carelessly." said Miss Annin, maliciously.

"I mean what I say. Clarence Arteveldt's wife stood before her guests at her wedding feast, and declared that she had been entrapped into the marriage; declared that she loathed the man beside her; that she would never live with him; that his eyes should never look upon her face again. She called on Heaven to witness her words, and swore that to-day all the world should know how she had avenged herself. Then she vanished, as if the earth had opened and swallowed her."

"You lie! You lie!"

The words are almost a shriek. Again the form of the invalid becomes suddenly erect. She looks as if she were going wild.

"I wouldn't!" Miss Annin speaks in a low, steady tone, and looks her straight in the eye. "One would think you were deeply interested. It looks bad."

Something in the words, or the look, or the tone, causes the invalid to sink suddenly back among her cushions, and to lie there motionless and silent for some moments. When she speaks again, all the expression has gone out of her face, all the intensity out of her voice.

"Tell me what you mean? I believe you are trying to annoy me."

"No; this is too terrible a thing to jest about." Miss Annin draws her chair nearer the couch as she speaks, and then, with her eyes fixed upon Aura's face, tells the story of the bride's denunciation and disappearance, concluding thus:—

"The bride was not seen after, but—last night Clarence Arteveldt, half crazed with grief and wine, lay down upon the couch prepared for his bride—and this morning was found—a corpse."

"What!" The voice is very low this time, but full of horror unutterable.

"I repeat it; Clarence Arteveldt was murdered last night."

"My God!" Again that horror-stricken tone. Miss Annin gazes and gazes, but the face is locked in sphinx-like calm. Only the voice betrays emotion, and she does not hear that again. Miss Durand lies like a statue under her gaze. A puzzled expression comes into the face of Miss Annin. She draws from her pocket a folded paper and throws it upon the couch.

"There," she says, in an almost sullen tone, "there is the evening paper; read for yourself."

"Thank you."

Miss Annin rises and moves toward the door. "Shall I send Laura?" she asks, rather ungraciously.

"No."

"Then good-night."

No answer. Miss Durand does not so much as glance toward her. When the door has closed behind her, however, the heiress springs up again and clutches at the paper.

"It can't be! It can't!" she whispers, in horrified aspirates. But her eyes fall upon the awful headlines. It is all there; it is true. With a moan of anguish, she flings the paper from her; and then the crippled heiress stands erect in the middle of the beautiful room; her eyes are distended; her face is livid, ghastly, horrible—there is not a trace of beauty there.

"He dead! He murdered! Clarence, my Clarence, lying lifeless and cold! Oh, I am going mad! His life sacrificed, and she escaped! Horror! Horror! She escaped! She—his murderess! Ha! ha! ha! ha!!"

She flings her arms aloft; she writhes like a serpent. Then, with that awful, maniac laughter upon her lips, falls senseless.

Instantly the door is flung open; so prompt is the action that one would think that the intruder could not have been far from the keyhole. It is Miss Annin, and she bends over the prostrate form with a look of cold, critical scrutiny. Closer she bends, and then puts her fingers over the heart and pulse of the insensible heiress. This done, she lifts her face and stands erect, wearing that baffled look once more.

"This is genuine!" she mutters; "and—I don't understand it."

She rings the bell then; help comes, and they set to work to restore their fainting mistress. She remains unconscious a long time; so long that they become alarmed. But at last she revives, and, opening her eyes, suddenly looks about her. When at last she speaks, the look on Nina Annin's face tells that the words are not what she had expected, or hoped, to hear.

"Did I—faint?" she murmurs, in the lowest and softest of tones. "Yes, I remember I tried to get up, and—my foot failed me." Then she closed her eyes, and seemed to fall asleep. After a time, Nina Annin turned to Laura.

"Some one ought to remain near Miss Durand," she said, kindly; "and you are too tired; go and rest now, and I will lie down on that couch, and be ready if she needs anything. You must, Laura, I insist upon it."

With seeming reluctance, and inward gladness, Laura goes, and Miss Annin begins her vigil beside the sleeper. All night long Aura Durand lies with closed eyes, and calm, upturned face; she moves a little sometimes, as sleepers will, but although Miss Annin steals to the bedside fifty times during the night, although sometimes she bends very near, and waves a wax light from one of the candelabra in the very eyes of the sleeper, although—accidentally, of course—she overturns something or makes some sudden noise near the bedside, Aura never once opens her eyes, or gives evidence by any restlessness that her repose is in the least disturbed.

At last the morning dawns, and Miss Annin, pale and weary with her vigil, is about to steal from the room, when the voice of Miss Durand calls "Laura," and then as she turns involuntarily, "Oh, it's you, Miss Annin. how came you about so early?"

"I have been here all night," replied Miss Annin, coming to the bedside; "you were so restless, and I thought it best not to leave Laura with you."

Miss Durand actually laughed. "You were very thoughtful. But I have had a good night's sleep, I think. Was I very restless?"

"Very."

"Ah!" with a queer gleam in her eye. "Then I must have disturbed you more or less. Please ring for Laura, I want some breakfast."

Miss Annin summoned the maid, and then betook herself to her own room, sleepy and disappointed.

"What a fool," muttered Miss Durand, when Miss Annin had left the room; then reaching out for a little hand mirror that lay near, she surveyed her face critically.

"I think I look very well, considering that I have not slept at all," she soliloquised. "What a satisfaction it was to hear that girl fidgeting about all night. I have gone some needful thinking too—but the strain was very wearing; I must rest to-day—after I have settled with her."

While she breakfasted she penned a hasty note, and sent it away by messenger. Then Laura attired her in bewitching negligé, and she lay down upon her couch, and waited. An hour later the footman came to the door, and presented a card.

"Show him up instantly," commanded Miss Durand, glancing at it hastily; then as the servant retired, "Laura, if Miss Annin should come from her room, keep her away from here; tell her that I am sleeping."

A moment later, and Mr. George Fordham entered the boudoir. He looked flushed and annoyed; Lenore's denunciation had made him unpleasantly notorious, and was already exerting a damaging influence against him. He had answered Miss Durand's summons reluctantly, supposing that she wished to question him in regard to the Arteveldt tragedy.

"Sit down, Mr. Fordham," said Aura Durand, abruptly, as he paused before her. "What I wish to say must be said quickly; I want no one to know of this conversation, you understand."

He nodded, and took the seat indicated.

"When will your house be ready?"

"Soon. Why?"

"Because I want you to hasten the preparations."

"What! You have yourself retarded them hitherto. The sooner it is open the better for me—now."

"Very well, then. Listen, I want you to take Nina Annin away immediately, immediately; do you hear?"

"Why? Has anything more disagreeable than usual happened?" with insolent ease.

"No matter what has happened; I won't have her here; I won't! she will go to-day if you use your influence. You know that."

"Oh yes, I know that. I wish to the Lord my influence over her would run out; I'm heartily sick of it, I tell you."

"I suppose so. Being a man, you could not be expected to remain true to a woman long. How soon can you take her away?"

"Soon as the house is ready," with a shrug. "That is, if—"

"If you are well paid. Do you want a thousand dollars this morning?"

"I should think so, rather!"

"Well, I will give you half that sum now, and twice as much when she is out of my sight for good. Mind, you must not let her come here to annoy me."

They talked a few moments longer, and then, five hundred dollars richer, Mr. Fordham took his leave.

"She's as good as a bonanza," he muttered, as he turned away. "And how she does hate Nina; she seems to be pretty flush, even for a rich man's daughter. I don't quite understand it; and she never once referred to the Arteveldt affair. She is a cool hand."

The Tea Cup Test

It is well enough to talk about the good qualities of a tea, but after all it is what is shown by brewing that is the final test. The number of cups of good tea that can be brewed from a single pound has as much relation to economy as the price per pound. From a pound of Ram Lal's Pure Indian Tea, 200 cups of tea can be made. Beside, the strength there is the quality of the brew, and in this Ram Lal's stands above all others.

A DENIAL FROM SPAIN

The Don Denies Responsibility for the Iloilo Difficulty.

THE OPEN DOOR OF THE BRITISH.

The Cobden Club Decides Upon an Active Campaign and Announces a Change of Policy—It Will Hereafter Interest Itself in Foreign Policy — Esterhazy Will Give Evidence.

Madrid, Jan. 5.—The statement that the Spaniards evacuated Iloilo in order to render the situation more difficult for the Americans is positively denied here. It is added here that the Spanish Government, immediately after the signing of the treaty of peace, ordered the Philippines to be evacuated as quickly as possible, in order to avoid further bloodshed and "conform with the expressed wish of the Americans, who were very exacting, especially in the case of Cuba."

President McKinley Ignorant.

An interview with an ex-prefect of a province of the Philippines was published here, during the course of which he is quoted as saying: "President McKinley has shown complete ignorance of the situation in the Philippines. When the Americans occupied Manila there were only four insurgent provinces. The Americans encouraged the rebellion, and now they themselves are the victims of the support which they gave the insurgents, who have become masters of the entire archipelago except Mindanao, where the natives, who are Mussulmans, have refused to recognize American rule, although they have not revolted."

Aguinaldo and the Americans.

Spanish patriots in the Philippines declare that Aguinaldo's unpopularity is due to his friendship for the Americans. They state that his cruelty to Spanish prisoners has been horrible, and that a thousand monks have died from ill-treatment.

THE OPEN DOOR.

The Cobden Club of England Announces a Change of Policy.

London, Jan. 5.—The executive committee of the Cobden Club has issued a manifesto signed by Baron Farrer pointing out that the policy of territorial expansion on the part of the great powers raised the question of free commercial intercourse in a new and extremely important form and renders it desirable that the club should reconsider its former attitude of reticence with regard to foreign affairs.

The manifesto says: "The world is gradually recognizing that this question cannot be finally settled by any nation as a purely domestic matter." In the opinion of the committee, "some understanding regarding commercial policy must precede any satisfactory results from the disarmament proposals of the Czar," and they conclude the manifesto with this declaration:

"In our judgment the club should hereafter make more comprehensive endeavors to shape Great Britain's foreign policy, so as to secure the adhesion of other nations to the 'open door' policy, especially in the derelict countries now passing into the control of strong civilized powers."

The Cobden Club's new departure is the chief subject of editorial comment in the morning papers, the drift of which is good-humored chaff that the club has at last been compelled to abandon its original strict tenets, and to adapt itself to present necessities.

Esterhazy to Be a Witness.

Paris, Jan. 5.—Major Comte Ferdinand Walsin Esterhazy, now known as the author of the Dreyfus bordereau, has been summoned to appear before the Court of Cassation on Jan. 12. It is understood that no formal undertaking has been given. He will be free from arrest coming and going. It is expected that the Dreyfus depositions will be received on Saturday from Cayenne, and the court will then decide whether his actual presence is necessary in Paris. It is believed, however, that the whole examination will be conducted by telegraph at an enormous expense, in order to avoid dangerous manifestations here.

TERROR REIGNS IN BELGRADE.

A Belief That the Dynasty of King Alexander Must Soon Fall.

Moscow, Jan. 5.—It is believed here that the Obrenovich dynasty, now ruling Servia, in the person of King Alexander, must soon fall. Advices received from Belgrade indicate that terror reigns in the Servian capital. Russia, acting through M. Jadovski, her minister at Belgrade, has just forced Servia to guarantee the stupendous debts of former King Milan, who now has chief command in the Servian army, while the unforgetting exasperation of the people over the misrule of M. Ristich, Milan's tool, who was regent during the term of Alexander's minority—from 1889 to 1893—adds a new element of danger to the situation.

Nicholas of Montenegro Active.

Prince Nicholas of Montenegro, in his activity under these circumstances, cannot be regarded as an independent factor among the forces that are making for a change of regime in Servia, for it is with the Czar's guns, for the most part, that he is arming his mountain soldiery. The Russian Emperor, not long since, presented the Balkan prince, as a mark of friendship, with 30,000 rifles, and Nicholas is rapidly getting a militia force of 80,000 men in fighting trim.

Beyond the Montenegrin border—in Servia, that is to say—Prince Nicholas' popularity falls little short of that which he enjoys among his own feudal subjects, and in the bringing of honest government to Servia he may prove an agent not to be despised.

Good Russian Work in Afghanistan.

It is reported that Abdurrahman Khan, Ameer of Afghanistan, who has been seriously ailing of late, has been entirely restored to health by Russian physicians at his court.

Prince Victor Must Be Careful.

Paris, Jan. 5.—The Matin yesterday published an interview with a prominent Bonapartist, purporting to give the gist of Prince Victor Napoleon's statements to his committee the other day at Brussels. This represents him as preparing assiduously for a coup, which he is fully resolved to execute. Prince Victor, however, is hostile to all useless manifestations. His brother, Prince Louis Napoleon, will be found beside him "on the day of action." They are "closely united in warm and sincere affection."

A BATTLE ON THE TAPIS.

Italy Has Not Yet Got Rid of All the Causes of Anxiety in Regard to Erythrea.

Rome, Jan. 5.—The generals of the Italian army have been called to Rome to confer on the situation in Erythrea, as the Italian Red Sea colony is officially termed. The news from Northeastern Africa is conflicting, but trouble is expected. The War Department has large reinforcements ready, which it will throw across the Mediterranean and through the Suez Canal the instant their presence is seen to be necessary. The Italian garrison consists of 6,000 native troops, with twelve guns.

Battle of Native Races Expected.

A battle is expected hourly between Ras Makonnen, cousin of the Negus of Abyssinia and the Vice-Regal Governor of Harrar, and Ras Mangasha, Governor of Tigre, who claims independence of the Negus and is seeking to throw off Menelik's yoke. It is worth mentioning that these two races, or native governors, were two of the three able generals of the Negus—Ras Micael, being the other—who, in 1896, with an army of 100,000 men, defeated the Italian army under General Baratieri at Adowah.

EUGENIE MAKES VICTOR HER HEIR.

Son of Jerome Bonaparte Will Get $10,000,000 at Her Death.

Paris, Jan. 5.—Announcement is made on the authority of a member of the Bonapartist family that the ex-Empress Eugenie has decided to make Prince Victor Napoleon her heir to the $10,000,000 fund which the late Emperor arranged with several insurance companies to pay on the death of the Empress.

Prince Victor is the younger son of the late Victor Jerome Bonaparte, and is favored by many of the Bonapartists as rightful heir to the throne. It has always been supposed that Eugenie favored the elder brother, Prince Louis.

The Empress is full of confidence for a speedy triumph of Bonapartism. Prince Louis has been such a wild rake that the funds would not be safe in his hands. With so much money and the prestige of popularity, Prince Victor will undoubtedly be able in the future to stir up France.

Will Sir Henry Sell Out?

London, Jan. 5.—The future of the foremost actor and of the leading play house in England has been the principal subject of talk since Sir Henry Irving's illness at Glasgow has cut his tour and compelled him to take a winter's rest and to abandon his season at the Lyceum Theatre, which is now occupied by the old Carl Rosa Opera Company and which is singing "Corporal's Guard."

There are rumors that Irving may retire from the stage and sell the house. A number of papers yesterday reported that George Edwards will acquire the Lyceum and establish a brilliant comedy company.

A representative of the Associated Press has been informed from the best source that Irving's plans are not to retire from the stage, but to abandon his career as an actor-manager.

Were the Wounded Massacred?

London, Jan. 5.—The deliberate charge made by Bennett, an Omdurman correspondent, in the pages of The Contemporary Review, that the English and their allies in the Soudan campaign wantonly massacred wounded Dervishes after the fall of the city, is causing a great newspaper sensation here. Denials come freely from every quarter, and the bulk of the evidence seems to be strongly against Bennett. Bennett's charges stand absolutely unsupported in the face of the fact that 9,000—and later 11,000—Dervish prisoners were cared for by the medical staffs of the two armies, British and Egyptian, in Omdurman itself.

France and French Shore.

London, Jan. 5.—The Paris correspondent of The Daily News says:

"I believe the suggestions that France would accept compensation for French shore rights in Newfoundland are really prompted by the French Government. There is a manifest wish here to be done with the vexations and perils of this question.

"The shore has become useless as a nursery for marines and the fishery is falling off. I am confident that money compensation would be accepted."

Check on Dreyfus Revision.

Paris, Jan. 5.—The anti-Dreyfus partisans claim a great victory having been scored by their side in the presence of Gen. Chanoine, the former Minister of War, in the Court of Cassation during the examination of the secret dossier. This, they say, virtually makes the army a part of the court and is a further check on revision.

A Lieutenant Beheaded.

London, Jan. 5.—The Madrid correspondent of The Daily Mail says: In the rebellion at Batabeo Naval Lieutenant Bellamy was beheaded. The rebels also murdered a doctor and several other Europeans. A gunboat fired on the rebels, but its commander was unable to effect the release of the women.

Welcome Awaits Mr. Choate.

London, Jan. 5.—The Daily Chronicle this morning refers editorially in words of warmest welcome to the expected coming of Mr. Joseph Hodges Choate as United States ambassador to Great Britain, describing his as "thoroughly representative of all elements in America."

China's Latest Move.

Pekin, Jan. 5.—An Imperial edict has been issued appointing all viceroys and governors of provinces members ex-officio of the Tsung Li Yamen. This arrangement will undoubtedly make dealings with the Chinese Government much more difficult.

Russia Is With France.

Berlin, Jan. 5.—The Lokal Anzeiger says that the Russian representative at Pekin has been ordered to support French interests in China, "as energetically as though they were Russian."

Spain's Floating Debt.

Madrid, Jan. 5.—The Official Gazette announces that on Jan. 1 Spain's floating debt amounted to 554,816,595 pesetas, an increase of 11,812,095 pesetas over the figures at Jan. 1 of last year.

IMPORTANT ARRESTS.

Baron and Baroness de Bara Arrested in Florida—Charged With Fraudulently Using U.S. Mails.

Jacksonville, Fla., Jan. 5.—Postoffice Inspector Mayer caused the arrest at St. Augustine yesterday of Baron and Baroness de Bara, for using the United States mail in an alleged scheme to defraud. The couple, it is asserted, appeared in Chicago about the first of last September, and worked from an office at 115 Dearborn street. The Baron and Baroness, when arrested, claimed that the case is one of mistaken identity. Their home is furnished with magnificence. They have been received with more or less social regard since coming to St. Augustine and their entertainments have been elegant. They will be given a hearing before United States Commissioner Godell to-day.

A Big Swindle.

Chicago, Jan. 5.—A couple known as Baron and Baroness de Bara lived in Chicago from June 1 until Nov. 28 last year, and conducted, according to the postoffice officials, one of the greatest confidence games ever perpetrated in this country. Inspector Stuart has been working on the case for three weeks. It is estimated by this official that the couple have secured at least $50,000 by their schemes, and the work was done in two months. The victims, it is asserted, live in England and Scotland and number thousands. It is claimed by the postal authorities that the Baron represented himself as the head of the Edison Phonograph Company, and that by selling agencies in England and Scotland, mulcted his correspondents out of sums ranging from £1 to £100.

The numerous letters that arrived in Chicago after their departure were ordered forwarded to a small town in Connecticut, or else to New York City, where they were never asked for. It was only by chance that detectives turned their attention to St. Augustine. Less than three weeks had been taken up in the case since the first complaints of fraud came in.

WHERE IS THE CATANIA?

The Steamer Mesaba Stood by Her 22 Hours Without Result.

London, Jan. 5.—The Atlantic Transport Company's steamer Mesaba, Captain Layland, from New York on Dec. 24 for this port, which passed Brawls Point yesterday and reported that she spoke the American steamer Catania, Captain Furlong, from Glasgow on Dec. 17, for New York, in distress, in latitude 48 north and longitude 48 west, has arrived here, with details of the meeting. Captain Layland says he met the Catania on Dec. 29. Her funnel had been washed away and her decks had been swept. She asked to be taken in tow and the Mesaba agreed to do so if possible. A boat from the Mesaba, containing the chief officer and five men, was launched, and the chief officer finally succeeded in securing a line from the Catania, but the seas were so high that he was forced to drop it, as its weight was endangering the boat's crew of the Mesaba. As night was falling and the strength of the gale was increasing further attempts to take the Catania in tow were impossible.

The Catania then signalled, "Don't abandon me," and the Mesaba answered that she would not. Then the Mesaba asked the Catania to abandon their ship, but they refused. The Mesaba stood by all night, but at daylight the Catania was invisible.

After searching for the missing vessel until 9 o'clock in the morning of Dec. 30, the Mesaba proceeded for London, having stood by for 22 hours.

The People's Faith

Firmly Grounded Upon Real Merit —They Know Hood's Sarsaparilla Absolutely and Permanently Cures When All Others Fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is not merely a simple preparation of Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia and a little Iodide of Potassium.

Besides these excellent alteratives, it also contains those great anti-bilious and liver remedies, Mandrake and Dandelion. It also contains those great kidney remedies, Uva Ursi, Juniper Berries, and Pipsissewa.

Nor are these all. Other very valuable curative agents are harmoniously combined in Hood's Sarsaparilla and it is carefully prepared under the personal supervision of a regularly educated pharmacist.

Knowing these facts, is the abiding faith the people have in Hood's Sarsaparilla a matter of surprise? You can see why Hood's Sarsaparilla cures, when other medicines totally, absolutely fail.

TWIN TORTURERS!

Lumbago and Rheumatism made Harmless by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Lumbago and Rheumatism cause endless pain and suffering. Every man and woman who runs chances of getting wet, or catching cold, is liable to suffer from one or both. Our hospitals are full of sufferers from these diseases; none are more painful. Every nerve is on fire; every joint is a centre of agony; every muscle an area of torture. To move hand or foot makes the victim shriek with agony.

Rheumatism makes more cripples than all the railroad accidents that ever happened. Twisted, mis-shapen caricatures of humanity, who cannot walk without misery, are to be seen every day. The kidneys are to blame. If they are healthy you needn't fear Rheumatism or Lumbago. Dodd's Kidney Pills keep the kidneys healthy and cure Rheumatism and Lumbago.

Dodd's Kidney Pills ALWAYS CURE.

IN PETERBOROUGH.

Mr. J. M. Donovan Tells how Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Him.

Peterborough, Dec. 26.—This town is famed throughout the Dominion as the most go-ahead, progressive, wealthy and up-to-date on the continent. This reputation is thoroughly deserved, and was earned by the quickness of the residents to see and to take advantage of a "good thing" when it comes our way.

One especially good thing that our people have benefitted by is the king of kidney cures—Dodd's Kidney Pills—a household remedy in Peterborough.

Among those cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills is Mr. J. M. Donovan, who reports that this remedy cured him completely of Urinary troubles, indicating the first stage of Diabetes.

Dodd's Kidney Pills are the only remedy that has ever been known to cure this disease. They never fail.

Boys Whipped in Public.

Evansville, Ind., Jan. 4.—Miner Garrett, Edward Gardner, Elijah Scott, Frank Curl and William Morris, boys ranging in age from 10 to 12 years, were given a public whipping in the Police Court for stealing some old wash boilers yesterday. Their parents were given the option by Judge Winfrey of whipping the boys or having them sent to the reform school. The boys were led to the hall by the turnkey and given 25 lashes each. Their yells could be heard for two blocks away. One of the boys was so weak after the flogging that he could hardly walk from the police station.

Children Cry for CASTORIA.

THE CHILD CAN'T HELP IT.

When a child does wrong wilfully, there is some reason in correcting it.

But when a little one's Kidneys are weak—can't control their water at night—it's wrong to scold and punish.

Thousands of children have been whipped for wetting the bed, who simply couldn't help it.

Parents are coming to understand that this is a disease that needs curing—not a "bad habit" that requires correcting, and are giving their children which strengthen and restore the Kidneys to healthy action, and prevent further trouble.

DOANS KIDNEY PILLS,

Mrs. Young, 15 Garish Street, Halifax, N.S., cured her little boy by giving him Doan's Kidney Pills. This is what she says:

"My little boy, 13 years old, has for several years been afflicted with weakness in the retention of his water, and did not seem to have any control of his urine.

"Hearing of Doan's Kidney Pills, I procured a box, and must say that they helped him wonderfully. He has now finished his second box, and I feel they have cured him. He is pleased to think he can retain his water, as it was so distressing to have the trouble of this inconvenience."

THEY HANGED JACK JOLLY.

Told to Get Out of Eagle City, Refused and Was Strung Up—A Variety Actress Shot Herself.

Vancouver, B.C., Jan. 5.—The steamer Rosalie arrived from the north last night with news of an uprising of citizens in Eagle City, Alaska, against the Jack Jolly gang of gamblers and toughs. Jolly was given 48 hours to leave the city. He refused and was hanged by a vigilance committee. The rest of the gang made for the coast.

Myrtle Brosse, a variety actress of Dawson, a native of Lindsay, Ont., said to be the handsomest girl on the coast, blew her brains out just before the sailing of the Rosalie, owing to her sister Florence having successfully won the love of a wealthy Klondiker whom she had hoped to marry. The poor girl's reputation on the coast was consistent with her remaining a good woman while surrounded with depravity and unclean-liness in the coast music halls. The affair has created a big sensation on the coast.

MR. SIFTON'S DECISION.

He Settles the Yukon Claim Case According to the Evidence.

Ottawa, Jan. 5.—Mr. Sifton has given a decision in the appeal of Andrew Donnelly, H. A. Fairchild, Alexander Macdonald and R. Morrison against the action of ex-Gold Commissioner Fawcett in recording claim No. 34, below the Upper Discovery, on Dominion Creek, upon the application of a prospector named Blade, whose successors are Andrew Nelson and Lucille Elliott. The claim was staked by Blade on June 12, 1897, and by Donnelly on June 13, and inadvertently recorded by Mr. Fawcett under the designation No. 17 above Lower Discovery, after having recorded it for Blade as No. 34 below Upper Discovery. By this mistake certificates for the same ground were issued to both parties. As the evidence showed that Donnelly had, though not designedly, secured the certificate upon a misstatement of material facts, the Minister holds that it is void. He directs that a new certificate be issued to Nelson and Miss Elliott, and that Donnelly and his associates be allowed $8,000 for work done in good faith upon the claim.

RESCUED FROM OCEAN'S GRAVE.

Ten American Sailors Who Were Saved From the Great Deep.

New York, Jan. 5.—The steamer Maasdam, Captain Potger, of the Holland American line, which arrived yesterday from Rotterdam, brought as passengers ten American sailors who were sent by the United States consul to Rotterdam. They were the captains and crews of the lumber schooner Bertrand and White and the coal-carrying schooner-barge Quinnebaug. The crews, in each case consisting of five men, were said to have been picked up at sea by an English sailing vessel and taken to Rotterdam. The men hailed from various ports on the Atlantic seaboard. The five men from the Quinnebaug practically returned from the grave, for since Dec. 2 they have been reported lost.

CANADIAN COAL IN THE STATES.

Colliers of Washington in a Panic Over the Threatened Competition.

Vancouver, B.C., Jan. 5.—The colliery men of Washington State are panic-stricken over the idea that the Canadian-American commission will secure the free import of Canadian coal into the United States.

They declare that whilst the Pennsylvania coal men will feel Canadian competition to a limited extent, under the suggested conditions of free import, the proposal will be absolutely fatal to the coal interests of Washington State, resulting in closing down many of the mines, and the short-time working of others. The Washington men admit that their inferior coal stands no chance in competition, duty free, with the Vancouver Island product, whilst as regards the interior of Washington State, the competition of the splendid coking coal of East Kootenay should in the early future prove equally formidable to the home coal producers of the State under free import conditions. The above news is very welcome to British Columbians, as free coal for the United States would to a certain extent offset the expected big giveaway of the province's sealing interests.

DESTRUCTION OF THE MAINE.

A Spanish Judge Said to Have Been Concerned in the Crime.

New York, Jan. 5.—The following is from The Herald: "Havana, Tuesday—The city is much excited to-night by the open charge made in El Reconcentrado, the organ of Cuba Libre, that Zacarias Bresmes, a Spanish judge now a fugitive from Havana, was actively engaged in the plot which resulted in the destruction of the Maine. El Reconcentrado to-day gave a sketch of Bresmes' career previous to last February, charging him with various crimes. The paper will say to-morrow:

"When the Maine came into Havana harbor Bresmes openly declared in the Spanish cafes that such an act of audacity on the part of the Yankees could not pass without stringent punishment. His threats were direct and boded destruction to the American ship. His associates were Felipe Gonzalez, Dion Sio Vega and Eusebio Ascue, violent Spaniards. Others with him were officers of the volunteers.

"When the explosion took place Bresmes was in the Tacon Theatre with friends. At the sound of the explosion he cried 'There goes the Maine.' Bresmes is now said to be hiding in Spain."

THERE'S SAFETY IN PROMPTNESS.

A Valuable Rule in Treatment of Stomach Troubles.

Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets are the Only Positive and Reliable Cure for These Diseases—Their Action is Powerful and Prompt, Their Effect Positive and Permanent.

A tiger cub can be easily killed. But when it has grown to full size and strength killing it is a different matter.

It is the same with disease. Take steps to cure it while it is in its first stage, and your object can be easily accomplished. Let it gain a firm footing, and it may cost hundreds of dollars, months of suffering, and untold anxiety, before it can be cured.

Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, and similar stomach diseases, are among the most stubborn ailments known. There is only one way to cure them. That is by rectifying the cause.

Time and money spent, in trying to cure these complaints in any other way, is time and money wasted.

Now the cause of Dyspepsia, Biliousness, etc., is imperfect digestion. Remove the defect in the digestive system and you get rid of the disease.

There is one remedy—and only one—that can do this. It is known the world over as Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets are unique among medicines. They possess the power of digesting any kind of human food. One or two of these Tablets taken after a meal will easily, thoroughly and positively digest every particle of food.

Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets act on the glands of the stomach and the stomach itself. They give strength and vigour to that organ and enable it to carry on its own work.

No disease nor defect of the stomach nor the liver can exist if Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets be used.

Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold by all druggists, at fifty cents a box; six boxes $2.50, or sent, on receipt of price, by The Dodds Medicine Co., Limited, Toronto.

Loughrin's Majority 791.

North Bay, Ont., Jan. 5.—Following is the official count of votes polled for each candidate in the Nipissing bye-election, which was held on Dec. 27 last: Total vote for Loughrin 1,849, total vote for Lamarche 1,051, majority for Loughrin 791.

Keep in mind that Scott's Emulsion contains the hypophosphites.

These alone make it of great value for all affections of the nervous system.

It also contains glycerine, a most valuable, soothing and healing agent. Then there is the cod-liver oil, acknowledged by all physicians as the best remedy for poor blood and loss in weight.

These three great remedial agents blended into a creamy Emulsion, make a remarkable tissue builder.

"IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY."

To Wm. McCabe, Esq., Managing Director, North American Life Assurance Co., Toronto:

DEAR SIR.—Your official notice came duly to hand, appraising me of the results obtainable upon my 15 year endowment Policy in your Company for $1,000, which matured on the 5th inst. Of the various options you have given me viz.:

Cash value	$1,564 90
Paid-up Policy, payable at my death, for	2,560 00
Yearly Income for life of	226 20

I have decided upon the cash value; and it gives me pleasure to testify that, as I anticipated it would be when I took out the policy, IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY. This returns me the full premiums of the 15 years and over 4½ per cent. compound interest, in addition to which you have carried the risk upon my life. In view of the low ruling rates of interest which have been obtainable during the latter portion of the period, it is difficult to see how this excellent result could have been surpassed.

Yours sincerely,

The Clarendon, Hastings.

The Peterborough guests who had the good fortune to enjoy the annual New Year's banquet provided by Mr. A. B. Spellman, of the Clarendon House, Hastings, for his regular guests and a few friends, are loud in their praises of the completeness of the arrangements and the excellence of the banquet, both in quality and style of service, which afford reliable evidence of the first-class manner in which the Clarendon is conducted. The genial nature of Mine Host Spellman, combined with a well-conducted house, accounts for the popularity of the Clarendon.

Philippine Newspapers.

Mr. A. E. Dixon has received from his nephew, Mr. McCamus, in Manilla, Philippine Islands, files of Manilla newspapers. Mr. McCamus, who left Peterborough six or seven years ago, and has been living in California, went to the Philippines with the first troopship during the late war. He is manager of an illustrated magazine, with a chief interest, which is being published in Manilla. The papers received don't look much like our civilized newspapers, the paper being very frail and the type as large as a Kindergarten primer. One journal, the "American Soldier," contains a superfluity of liquor store advertisements, evidently pointing to the fact that the Americans have already introduced one of the distinguishing features of civilization among the "Filippinos."

SERGEANT MAJOR RUNDLE RETIRES.

Ill Health Prevents Further Performance of His School Duties.

Sergeant-Major Rundle, the drill instructor of the Collegiate Institute and the Central Public School, has had to retire from active work. For the last six weeks he has been seriously ill from over application to his duties, and on attempting to resume work at the beginning of the school term on Tuesday, was unable to continue, and is compelled to announce his resignation from active service. This is to be very greatly regretted, for the sergeant-major was devoted to his work, and did what he did with all his might. He was both capable and willing, and his willingness has led to an overtaxing of his powers, resulting in his illness. He has been in the position he has just resigned in connection with our schools for eleven years, and his thoroughness, courtesy and effective work have given every satisfaction to the board and the pupils. Sergeant-Major Rundle has served his country all his life. He was twenty years in Her Majesty's service. He served with his regiment (the 17th Leicester) in the West India trouble with the natives, in New Brunswick at the time of the Fenian troubles. He was stationed in Toronto in 1866 and was made drill instructor in the military school of that period, from which Judge Dartnell, Dr. Hodgins, deputy Minister of Education, and at least one present resident of Peterborough graduated under his instruction. He also served in the Northwest as garrison sergeant major. He took his discharge with pension at Plymouth, England, in 1880. Sergeant Major Rundle is dependent upon his comparatively small pension and the profits of a grocery business, corner of Reid and McDonel street; for the maintenance of himself and family; and it hoped that in recognition of his services to the Empire, to Canada and to the schools of the town his claims for liberal patronage will not be ignored, but recognized by a patronage that will make his little business a paying one.

A QUIET WEDDING.

Nuptials of Miss May Richardson and Mr. Bruce McBean.

Yesterday afternoon at the residence of Mr. R. H. Kells, Miss May Richardson, one of Peterborough's most popular and estimable young ladies, and only daughter of Mr. Ralph Richardson, Cavan, was united in marriage to Mr. Bruce McBean, of Winnipeg, fourth son of Mr. Archibald McBean. The ceremony, which was of the most quiet character, was conducted in the presence of a few relatives and intimate friends of the principals, by Rev. George Richardson, Methodist minister of Ingersoll, uncle of the bride. The services of bridesmaid and groomsman were dispensed with. The bride was charmingly attired in a tailor-made travelling costume of garnet broadcloth, with garniture of sable and toque to match. After the ceremony the happy pair took the train for Toronto. After a trip to Montreal and eastern points, Mr. and Mrs. McBean will take residence in Winnipeg, where they will be followed by the cordial good wishes of a large circle of friends.

CARR-KEEGAN NUPTIAS.

Wedding Bells Rang in Cavan on Dec. 28th.

A very pleasant event took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Carr, Cavan, on the afternoon of Dec. 28th, being the marriage ceremony of their daughter Mary, to Mr. Jas. Keegan, of Cavan. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. C. H. Coone, of Cavanville Methodist church, in the presence of a number of friends and relatives of the interested parties.

The bride was very handsomely attired in pale blue cashmere, trimmed with cream silk and ribbons. The bridesmaid, who was Miss Annie Keegan, sister of the groom, looked pretty, also dressed in white dotted muslin. The groom was supported by Mr. Harry Jeffrey of Cavanville. After the ceremony was performed the company sat down to a sumptuous supper which all enjoyed very much. A very enjoyable time was spent in amusements and games until about 2 o'clock a.m., when the bride and groom took their departure for home amidst showers of rice and happy greetings. Their many friends wish them a happy and prosperous life together.

Baby Eczema and Scald Head.

Infants and young children are peculiarly subject to this terrible disorder, and if not promptly arrested it will eventually become chronic. Dr Chase made a special study of eczema and diseases of the skin, and we can confidently recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to cure all forms of eczema. The first application soothes the irritation and puts the little sufferer to rest.

An Aftermath of Bargains.

For the balance of the week we will give our customers the best value ever offered in books, stationery and fancy goods. We began the year well and we intend to end it well, if low prices will assist us in making big sales. Our special discount in dolls, our low price for games, our cheap toy books, are inducements for you to buy now at the Peterborough Bookstore.

Opera House Attraction.

"An Enemy to the King" is announced as one of the forthcoming attractions, which will be seen at the Opera House Tuesday, January 10. Probably no play upon the American stage to-day has created the widespread interest that has been allotted to "An Enemy of the King." When first produced by E. H. Sothern at the Lyceum Theatre, New York, its success was electric, and the fame of its author—R. N. Stephens—was made in a single night. The original production in its entirity will be given by John Griffith and a specially selected company, rehearsed by Mr. Sothern himself. Seats are now on sale. 1d

Peterborough's Modern Store.

The Outlook for 1899

THIS STORE starts the new year with every indication pointing to a bigger success than ever. Our policy commends itself to everyone BUYING AND SELLING FOR SPOT CASH is the only system to-day that a successful business can be accomplished with. It gives us advantages and possibilities that cannot be equalled with the old fogy system.

This store has revolutionized the prices of Dry Goods in Peterborough, making it possible for the people of Peterborough and surrounding district to buy goods as cheap if not cheaper than any place in Canada. Our modern store and modern system of doing business has been a grand success, not withstanding all predictions to the contrary. Peterborough has shown herself big enough and a good enough business centre to maintain a first-class store, and we feel justified in still further keeping this store more than ever in the front rank of merchandising.

The success of our Thursday Bargain Day has been so marked—the bargains have been so genuine—that no one can question them, and the crowds of delighted customers that participate in them every Thursday makes us feel that for the benefit of our out-of-town customers and for those who always do their shopping on Saturday, we ought to make another, A SATURDAY BARGAIN DAY, and we have decided to start the first Saturday of the New Year with ANOTHER GENUINE BARGAIN DAY such as this store has had the reputation of having.

THE LIFE OF MR. JAMES WALSH.

He Was Formerly a Resident of Peterborough.

BUT NOW LIVING IN WINNIPEG.

A Western Paper Gives a Most Interesting Account of His Life Under the Heading of "A Backwoods Hero."

The Evening News Bulletin, of Winnipeg, publishes the following sketch of the life of Mr. Jas. Walsh, who will be remembered by many as a former citizen of Peterborough. During his residence in town, he for some years bought horses for Mr. W. H. Wrighton, and afterwards was associated with the same gentleman in the buying of furs. It was whilst looking after some horses in Providence, R.I., that he broke his leg. The limb was never set and consequently Mr. Walsh was afterwards quite lame. Mrs. George Hall, of town, is a neice of the subject of the sketch, and Mr. George Chalmers is also related to him. The late John Walsh, of Cavan, was a brother. He was more familiarly known to his friends in Peterborough as "Uncle Jimmy Walsh":—

History has handed down to posterity a record of the remarkable abilities of men who have achieved distinction in art, science, literature, politics and war, yet is it not strange that the pioneer heroes of our own country are almost forgotten? One reason, perhaps, that no historian has yet appeared to sing their praises is because few are still alive, and an autobiography prevents fulsome praise, whereas biographies sometimes are written as Lord Byron aptly puts it:

"When some proud son of man returns to earth
Unknown to glory, but upheld by birth.
The sculptor's art exhausts the pomp of woe
And storied urns record who rests below.
When all is done upon the tomb is seen,
Not what he was, but what he should have been.

The poetic snarl is cynical, yet we all know that it contains an element of that grand essential truth.

The greatest of Canadian poets has, it is pleasant to write, immortalized the men who played so prominent a part in building up this Canada of ours, men who, as he so eloquently says, ventured in the wilderness with little save an axe and a determined will, and would hew their way to independence; such a man he describes as a "Backwoods Hero."

"He chopped, he logged, he cleared his lot,
And into many a dismal spot
He let the light of day,
And through the long and dismal swamp,
So dark, so dreary and so damp,
He made a turnpike way;
And many a lovely spot of green
Which peeps out there the woods between
Came forth at his command.
What was it that he would not face?
He bridged the stream, he cut the race,
Led water to the mill.
And planned and plotted night and day,
Till every obstacle gave way
To his unconquered will."

Such was the Backwoods Hero of Canada, and one of the last and noblest of them all is the subject of this sketch, Mr. James Walsh.

This gentleman was born on the ocean on the 12th of December, 1816, his parents then being on their way from England to settle in Canada. The family first settled at St. Laurent, near Montreal, but in 1831 left that place for the county of Durham, in the township of Cavan, this trip taking at that time twelve days, but steam since then has so annihilated distance the journey could now be made in a few hours. He lived and assisted his parents to clear their farm which in those days was such an undertaking, that, when a clearing had been made large enough in which to grow a few bushels of potatoes, a feeling of victory permeated the whole family. What a contrast to the farmer who settles on Manitoba's treeless and fertile prairies!

When Mr. Walsh was twenty-one years of age he married a Miss Graham, who died in Winnipeg about ten years ago. The result of this marriage was six sons and a daughter, the youngest of the family being Mr. Frank Walsh, the present manager of the Bell Telphone Co., at Winnipeg. Nature had endowed Frank's father more than generously—though not of such immense size as the hero of Lorna Doone"—yet he had John Ridd's strength and gentleness. The writer when listening to his description of his first visit to California in the 1849, was forcibly reminded of the resemblance between Mr. Walsh and the hero of Blackmore's famous novel. To understand this, listen to the vicissitudes of this hazardous journey, how he left New York in 1849, and only reached his destination in July 1850, the route taken via the Isthmus of Panama, which at that period was the resort of robbers, murderers, and very conceivable kind of desperado. Listen to his escapades during his tramp across the Isthmus, and hear him tell of his being surrounded by the residuum of the earth's villians, and his manner to escape. Harken to the cruelties of the crew by the caption of the vessel on which he sailed from Panama to California. How at last Walsh was elected as leader, and the captain put in irons and kept there. This story will give you some idea of the immense strength of Mr. Walsh at that time. Space prevents details of the many daring exploits of this courageous and fearless man. Listen, again, if you are fond of gold stories, of how he acquired a valuable claim in California and left the same in charge of one of his relatives, while he went back to Canada to get more capital to develop it; of how this claim was disposed of during his absence for a mess of pottage, but made the purchasers millionaires. This nearly broke his heart, and caused him to leave California for British Columbia, and build for that government 175 miles of the now celebrated Cariboo road. At its completion he returned to Ontario to embark in his early occupation of road building.

He always had a great love for horses and usually owned a good one. His first noted horse was one named "General Taylor." This animal he purchased from Dr. Macklem, of Chippawa, near Niagara, previous to his going to California. As from the records it will be found that in 1848 at Buffalo he beat the great and what was thought invincible "St. Lawrence," a horse whose name to day is a household word with horsemen in Canada. He was also one of the first, if not the first, exporter of horses to England, and had for patrons some of England's most notable noblemen, viz., Earl Derby, Lord Sefton, Sir Digby Sheffield and others of equal celebrity. He once obtained the munificent sum of £600 sterling for a pair of horses, the Lord Bishop of London being the purchaser. One of the proudest days in his life was when the Prince of Wales came to this country in 1860, Mr. Walsh having at that time the finest pair of horses in Canada. This team was engaged for his royal highness, and Mr. Walsh was selected to drive. It is said that the prince remarked to a friend that he did not known which was the most perfectly formed, the horses or the driver, Mr. Walsh being at that time a perfect specimen of physical manhood.

In 1870 he left Ontario with the Wolseley expedition, and had charge of building the famous Dawson route. Mr. Dawson was, of course, the chief, and had surveyed for forty miles a stretch of country somewhat roundabout to avoid a marsh. Dawson's survey would have taken two months to complete, but Walsh informed General (now Lord) Wolseley that if he would give him the Sixtieth Rifles to assist his own men, he would build him a good road over the bog in a week, which he did. His description of how this work was done by his Canadian woodsmen is very interesting, especially when it is remembered the appliances at hand. He had made seventy hand-barrows in one day, his only materials being gunny-sacks, hoops from pork barrels and poles, and the manner these adept Canadians would bridge over a chasm or canyon, with only the bark of trees for rope, and the trees for everything else, or would weave a trestle from the same materials, and throw a road over a bog, caused General Wolseley to compliment them by saying: "Walsh, I never saw such men in all my life as these Canucks, they can do anything, with an auger, a jack-knife and an axe."

He was a great deer and moose hunter in his younger days, and acted as guide and companion of many noted English sportsmen, who used to visit Canada for big game hunting. He would, on these trips, buy furs from the Indians, and the knowledge thus gained caused him in 1873 to accept a position as buyer with Mr. Jas. H. Rodgers, now of Winnipeg, and Jos. Ulman, of St. Paul. He has been with Mr. Ulman ever since, and tells of buying in this country a black fox for this gentleman that was such a magnificent specimen that it was sold in Liepsig, Germany, for seven hundred and fifty dollars. Messrs. Ulman & Co. have so much confidence in the ability of Mr. Walsh that, though he is now 82 years of age, they a few days ago urgently requested him to go to Prince Albert and act as their buyer "just for another year."

Every Canadian should feel proud to know we have still with us so grand a specimen of Nature's noblemen, a man who has passed by a dozen years the allotted three score years and ten, yet whose mental faculties are as clear as ever, and whose memory is so retentive that he is a treat to listen to and a delight to meet, a big brained, great hearted, genial, whole souled, sympathetic fellow—manly before all men—but with the fine sensibilities of a woman. He is a great respecter of religion, but leans to no particular church. His creed is a broad but simple one: "Do right." His generosity and liberality are proverbial. His charitable acts would cause one to imagine that money had no value, as he would give a dollar to the needy, and treat it as if it were a leaf of a tree, and he owned forests.

Mr Walsh is now approaching

"The last scene of all that ends
This strange, eventful history."

and the writer most earnestly hopes that an abler pen than this will gather and record the deeds of these old road builders. It has been truly said that from the time of the Romans downwards, conquerors and colonizers have been road makers. "The actors are passing off the stage and their memories are already faded from the minds of men. It is a pity that it should be so, before their records are gathered together, for their achievements are the foundation of our country."

SAVED BY A PRAYER.

HOW A MINISTER RESCUED TWO MEN FROM THE GALLOWS.

The Awful Strain and Effort Nearly Killed the Clergyman, and the Incident Resulted In Changing the Law of Canada.

"I read not long ago," said a Buffalo citizen, "an amusing account of a man who prayed against time for an object, and it reminded me of a prayer against time that I heard when I was a boy. That prayer was a serious matter, too, I want to tell you, for the lives of two men depended on it, although they didn't know it. It saved their lives, but it came mighty near killing the man who prayed. And this put me in mind, too, that only the other day in rummaging among some old papers I found a time stained sheet of paper on which was printed a poem, a dozen or more verses in length, entitled the 'Mournful Ballad of Carr and Smith.' I hadn't seen or heard or thought of that poem for 60 years, but the moment I saw it every word in those 12 verses came back to my mind, for I had read them so often when I was a boy that I knew them by heart. I will repeat you the first verse to show you what you might expect of the other 11. This is the way it goes:

"Come, all ye weeping friends, and see
Alexander Carr die on the gallows tree,
For awful crime he did commit,
To it abetted by Solomon T. Smith.
And see Solomon, he, too, will die
The same awful fate, be hung on high.
Blind Justice with her awful sword
Cuts off these two with one accord.

"Justice must have been blind indeed in the case of Messrs. Carr and Smith, for she was going to cut them off with her awful sword for the heinous crime of stealing an ox! The poet, though, wasted the time of his muse, for, although hundreds of weeping friends and others who did not weep accepted the invitation of the ballad, they did not see either Alexander Carr or Solomon T. Smith die on the gallows tree, notwithstanding that Alexander and Solomon T. were both on hand ready to be cut off with one accord. They were saved, and saved by prayer too. And that's the prayer I am going to tell you about.

"It will seem incredible that within the memory of any person now living capital punishment was the legal penalty in Canada for the stealing of live stock, but such is the fact, for I remember when that was the law there. The year this ballad was printed must have been 1838, that in which Carr and Smith were to have been hanged at the little village of Vittoria, not far from Toronto, for the alleged stealing of an ox. I was a little boy then, living in Vittoria, but I remember the circumstances well, although the main incidents I know from having them frequently related by others. Carr was a simple minded man of middle age, and Smith was a younger man of about the same mental caliber. A farmer in the vicinity had an ox stolen one night. The skin was found in a place where Carr and Smith had been seen, and the two men were arrested, charged with being the thieves. The case made out against them on the trial seemed to satisfy the jury that they were guilty, and they were convicted and sentenced to be hanged.

"Among those who held that hanging for such a crime was no better than murder were the Rev. John Ryerson, a Baptist preacher, and Dr. Rolf, both of Vittoria. They had doubts also of the guilt of the condemned men and used all their influence for them on the trial, but in vain. The day was set for the hanging and the gibbet erected in a public place. On the morning of the day of execution Dominie Ryerson and Dr. Rolf resolved to make a final effort to save the two men. The doctor was to mount his horse and ride posthaste to Toronto and appeal to the governor for a reprieve or pardon, while the dominie, as spiritual adviser of the condemned men, was to delay the hanging until the doctor's return by exercising his privilege in prayer.

"A great, surging crowd of people surrounded the gallows when Carr and Smith were carried under the gibbet in a cart. I was one of them, having stolen from home for the occasion. The sheriff of course granted Dominie Ryerson's request to offer prayer for the two unfortunates. It was a hot day, and there was no shelter for any one from the fierce rays of the sun. No one had any suspicion that the good preacher had any ulterior motive in making that prayer, and for the first 15 minutes of it the sheriff and sweltering crowd listened with respectful patience. Then something of uneasiness began to take possession of the great audience. But the dominie prayed on. The sheriff moved about to call the preacher's attention to the fact that time was passing, and the sweating crowd began to sway and murmur. But prayer was not to be rudely interrupted even on such a pressing occasion as that, and the dominie prayed on. An hour passed. The preacher's voice had grown husky. His throat was dry and parched, his tongue almost clung to the roof of his mouth, and his lips were shriveled and cracked, but still he prayed. The condemned men themselves became impatient and showed by their looks that they longed for the good man to cease. Still he prayed, uttering words of no significance and almost inarticulate.

"The crowd became noisy in their heat and impatience, and the sheriff, at last feeling that duty should take the place of reverence, was about to take the dominie by the shoulder and compel him to cease when there was a shout heard on the outer edge of the crowd, and the people made way mechanically for a man who struggled through the surging mass toward the gibbet, waving a paper over his head. The man was Dr. Rolf, and the paper was a reprieve signed by the governor.

"At the sight of the doctor with a paper Dominie Ryerson fell insensible on the cart, and it was for a long time a matter of grave doubt whether he would recover from the effects of the extraordinary physical and nervous strain his prayer against time had subjected him to, but he came to in good time. The reprieve led to further investigation into the case of Carr and Smith, and the result was a pardon for both of them and the abolition of the death penalty in upper Canada for any crime except murder."

PRIMITIVE MAN AND FIRE.

Why the Savage Beasts Did Not Annihilate Human Life.

If, as seems probable, the animal fear of men was acquired and is not natural to their minds, it is not very clear how the very early tribes of men, when the larger carnivorous animals were far more numerous than now, escaped destruction and survived long enough to impress on the animal world the sense of fear by which man now dominates it. Regarded merely as a conflict between one class of animals and another, the result should not have been doubtful. Man ought to have disappeared from the face of the earth, or, in any case, to have retreated to remote strongholds in regions not frequented by the beasts. That he did not do so, but turned the tables on the better equipped offensive creature, is fair presumptive evidence that original man never was on a level with the animals in intelligence, but was equipped with the predominant brain power which has put him ahead in the race ever since.

Primitive man, literally speaking, "lived by his wits," for he could have owed his survival to little else. He was not, for example, nearly so well equipped as the monkeys for physical defense or flight, though their survival is not altogether easy to explain on purely physical grounds. Their power of using their arms and hands as a means of swinging rapidly from branch to branch gives them an advantage over all the tree climbing cats. Their habit of throwing missiles is also very disconcerting to other animals, though this art is only practiced by certain monkeys.

But their rapid and intelligent combination for defense, menace and lookout duty has contributed quite as much to their survival as their speed and activity. In tropical America even the monkeys are hard put to it to escape the attacks of such active and formidable foes as the harpy eagle and the ocelot. But it cannot be proved that even the most debased or physically weakest of mankind has ever been the "natural prey" of that "natural enemy" which, according to Sir Samuel Baker, is the nightmare of nearly every species of noncarnivorous animal.

The causes which make exceptions to this rule are temporary and narrowly local. Even the Greenlander and the Eskimo are the masters of the polar bear, and probably always have been, though little better armed than primitive man, and the pygmies of the Central African forests are mighty hunters. It may even be that the neighborhood of fierce animals aided the early development of man, for the least developed races are largely found in such places as Tierra del Fuego, where in the absence of savage beasts savage man had no inducement to arm and equip himself.

But man has had an even more potent ally than his own ingenuity which from remote antiquity has invested him in the mind of the animal world with something of the supernatural. He is ever accompanied by the one element which the animal mind cannot create, cannot understand, stands in constant awe of and dreads by night, when its courage is greatest and that of man least steady. Fire, that pillar of cloud and flame which precedes not the aggregate human host, but the smallest fragment of the invading army, the constant and dreaded harbinger of human presence, springing up, as the beasts must think, automatically from the earth wherever man rests his body, guarding him in sleeping and waking, always associated with his abode, has for ages terrified the beasts.—London Spectator.

The English Farm Laborer.

Most people unacquainted with the routine of a farm have a notion that a farm laborer's duties are of the simplest description. A writer on the subject in Longman's Magazine says:

"To such people I would say let them try any one of them, even the easiest, such as 'fleing' a ditch, and I think that they will change their views. In truth, there is no single operation on the land that does not require a very considerable amount of skill to perform it properly, and this skill, acquired by years of practice, the agricultural laborer puts at the service of any one who will pay him 18 shillings a week.

"Moreover, there is no nonsense about eight hours a day with him. With brief intervals for food, he works from 6 to 6, or more, or in winter from daylight to dark. Indeed horsemen and cattlemen work longer. Moreover, when calves or foals are expected, they have often to sit up all night, perhaps for the best part of a week, and this without extra charge. Likewise holidays are for them practically nonexistent, and if the weather should be such that it is impossible for farm work to continue they go home and are docked of their wages."

Made the Hymn True.

In a small village in the south of England is a church which, owing to the absence of gas, is lit up by candles. For the convenience of the minister a candle is placed each side of the reading desk in the pulpit, in front of which the choir sits. The parson in this particular church had a habit of swinging his arms about whenever he was speaking to give emphasis to his words.

One Sunday night the latter was reading out the hymn,

Sometimes a light surprises
The Christian while he sings, when with a powerful swoop of his arm he knocked down one of the candles into the open mouth of one of the members of the choir beneath. The sputtering that ensued was something terrific. There was at least one Christian surprised that night. —London Globe.

Had to Have a Passport.

In the Caucasus some years ago a German lady was dangerously ill when the local police master called at the house and asked for her passport. The husband, an easy going man, said he had not got one, or, rather, that it was 20 years old, and therefore useless, and, as his wife was dangerously ill and the doctor doubted her living through the day, the demand was ill timed.

"What!" exclaimed the police master. "Dying without a passport! She can't die without a passport!"

And she didn't.—Argonaut.

CASTING OUT DEVILS.

Inhuman Methods That Are Used In Superstitious Russia.

Superstition is very rife throughout Russia and the east. In some parts of Russia the people believe that devils can enter into the organism of human beings, whose actions they thereafter guide, and there are sorcerers who profess to be able to cast out the spirits. These men are utterly without scruple, and the sufferings which they cause their victims to undergo may be easily imagined. Very few cases ever come before the law courts. The people look upon the wizard as a powerful personage, who can work them much evil, and therefore not lightly to be provoked. Hence complaints are rarely laid before the tribunals.

A typical story of the sort, however, recently came before the court of Vladicaucase. A Mohammedan mollah, or priest, named Ahmed Ramasanoff, was charged with torturing a peasant woman named Kotcheretova, his object being to drive devils out of her. Kotcheretova, who was only 20, fell ill, her malady being accompanied by epileptic fits. The villagers and her husband, a man named Aslan-Bek, came to the conclusion that she was afflicted by evil spirits, and the husband called upon the mollah Ramasanoff to cast them out. The priest came to the house and began his treatment.

First of all they made up a big wood fire, and when there were plenty of hot ashes they stripped the young woman and tied her hands and feet. Seeing these ominous preparations, Kotcheretova began to cry out, and begged them to desist. "Cut off my arms, put out my eyes; do what you like, but do not burn me!" They paid no attention to her pleadings, and, picking her up, placed her on the fire. She then became insensible. She was covered with burns, which the doctor who examined her declared to be of a very severe character.

When brought before the court, the priest explained that the woman's husband had sought his advice. He consulted Aslan-Bek to force his wife to name the spooks, and he (the priest) would be able to restore her to health. He had put her on the fire until she gave the names of the evil spirits, which he then wrote upon a piece of paper and threw it into the flames, after which he was quite sure that the devils would leave her. He added that when she cried before being put on the hearth it was not she that wept, but the devils.

The inquiry showed that the woman had been kept on hot ashes for eight hours. The head man of the village deposed that such methods of treatment were often employed and were always successful. The court found the priest guilty and sentenced him to deprivation of all his civil rights and to one year's imprisonment. The husband would have also tried, but that his wife declared that she forgave him.—St. Petersburg Correspondence.

He Would Not Believe It.

There is at times excuse for incredulity. A certain representative of the sultan of Turkey on one occasion was perhaps to be excused for unbelief.

It was when the Duke of York—now the heir to the English throne and the commander of a battleship—was a young midshipman and his ship was in Turkish waters. The story is vouched for by Admiral Sir Frederick Bedford, under whom Prince George served.

The vessel called at a Turkish port to coal, and during this operation a representative of the sultan came to pay his respects to his royal highness. He was courteously received by the captain, but in response said that it was for the prince his visit was intended.

"I am in command," said Sir Frederick, "and the prince is an officer, but here he comes."

At that moment the queen's grandson, who was in command of the coaling party and who was noted for energy in the performance of his duties, came up. That he was in command of the coaling party needed not to be explained to the visitor. The fact was apparent. He was as black as any of the men.

The Turk turned away in disgust, refusing to believe that he was face to face with an English prince, and left with the conviction that he had been hoaxed.—Youth's Companion.

Let's Poor Wife.

According to Harlem Life, a Sunday school teacher was telling the story of Lot's wife being turned into a pillar of salt. One of her pupils was little Isabel, who had spent most of her life on a western cattle ranch. The teacher ended the story by saying, "For all I know, the pillar of salt may be there now."

"Say, was that a cattle country?" asked Isabel.

"Yes; I think so," replied the teacher.

"Well, let me tell you," with an air of superior knowledge, "those cattle would have licked her up long ago."

Geography.

"Well, what is an island?" asked the man upon being informed that his son had now taken up the study of geography at school.

"Land entirely surrounded by water," replied the boy.

"That is not correct," said the man. "An island is land surrounded by water on all sides except the upper side. Land entirely surrounded by water is suburban real estate."

Then the man remarked to his wife that schools were too theoretical; there was need of an admixture of practical knowledge in their instruction.—Detroit Journal.

Johnnie's Version.

Teacher—Yes, children, it's a very good proverb, "When you put your hand to the plow don't look back." It means that when you make up your mind to do a thing you must do it with all your might, without regret and paying no attention to anything else. Now, will some little boy repeat the proverb for me? Ah, yes, Johnnie will! What is it, Johnnie?

His Idle Dream.

He went into a store to buy a book.
The pretty maiden at the counter there
Half smiled as she bestowed on him a look
That thrilled him from his toes unto his hair.

He handled fifty books, for which he cared
No more than if they'd been the meanest dirt.
He lingered just because the maiden stared.
He felt that he'd become an awful flirt.

A glass hung on the wall behind him, and Therein at last he saw his mirrored face.
Some soot upon his nose had chanced to land—
In seven seconds he had quit the place.

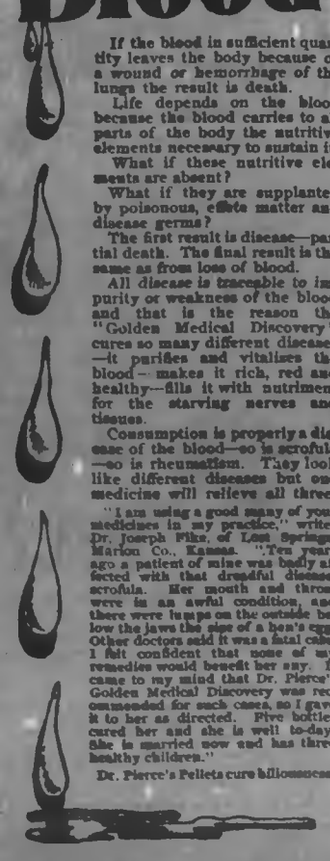
A Sure Cure For Consumption.

There is no such thing. Scott's Emulsion comes the nearest to it, but even that will not cure advanced cases, but taken in time it will cure this disease.

Blood



If the blood is sufficient quantity leaves the body because of a wound or hemorrhage of the lungs the result is death.

Life depends on the blood because the blood carries to all parts of the body the nutritive elements necessary to sustain it.

What if these nutritive elements are absent?

What if they are supplanted by poisonous, effete matter and disease germs?

The first result is disease—partial death. The final result is the same as from loss of blood.

All disease is traceable to impurity or weakness of the blood and that is the reason the "Golden Medical Discovery" cures so many different diseases—it purifies and vitalizes the blood—makes it rich, red and healthy—fills it with nutriment for the starving nerves and tissues.

Consumption is properly a disease of the blood—so is scrofula—so is rheumatism. They look like different diseases but one medicine will relieve all three.

"I am using a good many of your medicines in my practice," writes Dr. Joseph Fike, of Lost Springs, Marion Co., Kansas. "Ten years ago a patient of mine was badly affected with that dreadful disease, scrofula. Her mouth and throat were in an awful condition, and there were lumps on the outside below the jaws the size of a hen's egg. Other doctors said it was a fatal case. I felt confident that some of my remedies would benefit her any. It came to my mind that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery was recommended for such cases, so I gave it to her as directed. Five bottles cured her and she is well to-day. She is married now and has three healthy children."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills
Strengthen Weak and Nervous People.

NERVOUS DEBILITY.

Mr. Jas. Purtelle, a well known farmer living near Crofton, Ont., says: "For several years I have been a sufferer from nervousness and general debility. I believe my troubles originated in over-work, aggravated by a severe cold. I had advice from doctors in Picton and Belleville, but did not get any better. Then I went to Toronto for treatment, and for a time experienced some relief, but it was only temporary, and soon I was worse than before. Some of my neighbors advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Before the first box was gone I found relief, and after I had used a few boxes more I was rejoicing in complete recovery, and my health has since been excellent. Words fail to express the value I now place on the little pink messengers of health, and I only hope other sufferers will follow my example."

NERVOUS AND RUN DOWN—CURED.

Mrs. C. Roblin, of Kingsville, Ont., says: "I have derived much benefit from the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. My nervous system was completely run down, and the nerves of my eyes were so much affected that I could scarcely see, and I had to go to an oculist and have glasses made to order so I could walk about. I tried many kinds of medicine without any beneficial effect whatever. One day a little book advertising Dr. Williams' Pink Pills was left at my house, and after reading it I determined to try this medicine, and to my surprise I began to feel better before I had finished the first box. I have used three boxes and find my nervous system as strong as ever it was, and my eyesight has improved to such an extent that I go around half the time without using my glasses."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills build anew the blood, strengthen the nerves and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. They are a cure for all troubles peculiar to the female system, young or old, and also cure such diseases as rheumatism, neuralgia, partial paralysis, locomotor ataxia, St. Vitus dance, nervous headache, nervous prostration, the after effects of la grippe, influenza and severe colds, diseases depending on humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc. Do not be persuaded to accept any imitation, no matter what the dealer may say who offers it. Imitations never cured any one. See that the full name Dr. Williams Pink Pills for Pale People is on the wrapper around every box you buy.

EXTREME NERVOUSNESS.

Frequently Brings its Victim to the Verge of Insanity—The Case of a Young Lady Given up by Two Doctors.

From the Smith's Falls News.

Many cases have been reported of invalids who had suffered for years, and who had been given up by the attending physician who have been restored to health and vigor through that now world-famed medicine, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, but we doubt if there is one more startling or more convincing than that of Miss Elizabeth Minshull, who resides with her brother, Mr. Thos. Minshull, of this town. The News meeting Mr. Minshull asked him if the story was correct. He replied: "All I know is that my sister had been given up as incurable by two physicians. She is now well enough to do any kind of housework, and this change has, it is my honest conviction, been brought about by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. My sister is 33 years of age. She came to Canada from England about ten years ago, and resided with a Baptist minister, Rev. Mr. Cody, at Sorel, Que. In April of 1896 she took ill and gradually grew worse. She was under a local physician's care for over five months. The doctor said that she was suffering from a complication of nervous diseases, and that he could do little for her. The minister then wrote me and I had her come to Smith's Falls in the hope that a change and rest would do her good. When she arrived here she was in a very weak state and a local physician was called in to see her. He attended her for some time, but with poor results, and finally acknowledged that the case was one which he could do very little for. My sister had by this time become a pitiable object; slightest noise would disturb her, and the slightest exertion would almost make her insane. It required someone to be with her at all times, and often after a fit of extreme nervousness she would become unconscious and remain in that state for hours. When I went home I had to take my boots off at the doorstep so as not to disturb her. When the doctor told me he could do nothing for her, I consulted with my wife, who had great faith in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I concluded it would do no harm to try them anyway, and mentioned the fact to the doctor. The doctor did not oppose their use, but said he thought they might do her good, as they were certainly a good medicine. In September of last year she began to use the Pills, and before two boxes had been used, she began to show signs of improvement. She has continued their use since, and is to-day a living testimony of the curative power of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

CHAPTER XXII.

MOTHER GOOSE'S LOG-BOOK.

At last the curtain has fallen upon the scene of Clarence Arteveldt's life drama. At last the grave closes over him, and the sorrowing mother, the horror-stricken friends, and the on-looking spectators turn their thoughts from the murdered and buried victim to the finding of the murderess. For every one, save Kate Beaton, believes in the guilt of the fugitive Lenore. Even Kate has not dared to confide her belief to any save the detective and her own sister.

Mrs. Arteveldt would have Neil Bathurst near her almost constantly; and because of his influence over her, the doctor has told him it was best to humour her, "if he could."

Mr. Hale objected, averring that the search for Lenore Armyn should be promptly begun, and vigorously prosecuted. But the detective had answered in a way that effectually silenced further objection on the part of the worthy lawyer.

"You must allow me to be the judge as to how this work should be done, sir. If the missing woman is to be found, it will be as easy tracking her one week hence, as now; even easier. I have some work to do in the city, yet. This I shall not delay. But remember this, the woman planned her flight so well that not a trace of her destination can be found; a carriage was driven away from the neighbouring corner, but no one knows if it took her. I shall not leave the city until I have a clue to follow."

There was no more to be said; after that the young detective went about his work in his own way, unquestioned.

A large reward had been offered for the apprehension of the murderess, and, one day, just after the funeral, as Neil Bathurst sat beside Mrs. Arteveldt, she astonished him by saying:—

"Neil Bathurst, I want you to work now as you never did before, and I will make your reward such as was never offered before. I am now alone in the world; I have no near relatives; there is no one whom I could wish to see in my stead when I am gone. Find me my son's murderess, and the reward I have offered shall be doubled; and, when I am done living, this wealth, mine and my son's, shall become yours."

The detective stood astonished, and finally replied:—

"You have many years before you yet, Mrs. Arteveldt, and your wealth can benefit others more than it ever can me. The reward you offer I will accept, but nothing more. Look about you and find an heir or heiress. I have made money by my profession; I expect to make more, and—the chances are that I may die first. The life of a detective is not always a safe one."

"But—you need be a detective no longer if you become my heir. Find that girl fiend, and then abandon the profession."

The detective laughed.

"I could not give up my profession, not even for a fortune," he replied. "Let us drop the subject, Mrs. Arteveldt. I will find your son's destroyer, and then we will come to terms."

Day by day he worked in his quiet, calm way, and three days after that he called at Mr. Hale's office and handed him his first report.

"I must tell you," he said, as the lawyer took it from his hand, "that this is not what, in an agency, would be termed a complete report; that is, one minute as to the smallest details, and giving, not only facts, but ideas and suspicions. I have here reported the little that has been actually accomplished. I have made for my own benefit certain notes, setting forth some queer and some very vague suspicions; of these I shall make no mention until they become less shadowy. My work here, for the present, is done; I leave the city to-night."

"Really! Am I permitted to ask where you are going?"

"Certainly," replied Bathurst, with a laugh. "I am going to Fairlie, the former home of the runaway bride. Why I am going you will know when you read my report. Excuse me now, Mr. Hale, my time is limited," and Neil Bathurst bowed himself out of the lawyer's office, to be seen no more in the city until the winter snows lay deep upon the earth and a new year had begun his round.

Two hours later Mrs. Arteveldt and Kate Seaton sat listening, while Mr. Hale read aloud the first report of the detective:—

Chicago, Nov. 19, 187—.

Report of Neil R. Bathurst, in case of murder of Clarence S. Arteveldt, made to J. G. Hale, as agent for Mrs. Arteveldt.

Being summoned to the house of the dead, within two hours after the murder was discovered, I made a careful search in the room where the deed was done. Nothing had been disturbed, no robbery committed. Two facts seemed plain to me:—1st, that the murder was committed for revenge, not plunder; 2nd, that the deed was done by a cool and skilful hand, and with a foreign instrument, similar, but not the same, as the stiletto. I made a careful examination of the house, and could find no indications of any one either entering or leaving it after it was closed for the night. Every door, window, or opening of any sort was closely and securely fastened—with one exception, of which I shall presently speak.

During the excitement following upon the flight of the bride, it would not have been difficult for her, or another, to have entered the house and secreted herself, but to have left in any ordinary manner seems impossible. Naturally, here, these thoughts occur—The murder might have been committed by one of the servants in the house, or one of them might have been bribed to admit the murderer and afterwards secure the house again. These theories, however, have their improbable side, and I may as well remark here that I do not entertain either of them, neither do I believe that the servants are in any way implicated. I have made close enquiries of, and concerning them all, and I believe that they are too honest and too ignorant to plan and carry out such a deed. Nevertheless, I have placed a watch upon their movements, and would advise Mrs. Arteveldt to retain them, for the present at least; to set her own housekeeper over them, and keep the house open until something occurs to make the measure unnecessary.

I have made every effort to trace the fugitive from the house; but to no purpose. It is probable that she escaped in the carriage, which was seen to leave the vicinity a few moments after her disappearance, but we have no positive evidence of this. If she committed the murder, and the evidence in that direction is certainly strong, it is far more likely that she remained concealed in the neighbourhood until after the deed was done.

I have said that there was a single exception, when stating that the house was securely fastened. The trap, or hatchway, opening out upon the flat roof of the building, was not fastened, probably never had been. An expert climber, who had a confederate, might have mounted to the roof by means of hooks and a rope ladder. I say, "might," for this is quite improbable; only the most skilled housebreaker would dare attempt this feat, and a woman could not accomplish it. The houses on either side have similar hatchways, but they, so far as I have investigated, were all closed, and bore no traces of having been recently opened. How the murderer or murderess entered or escaped from the house, then, remains a mystery—yet to be solved.

I next set myself to work to obtain testimony of any and every description concerning the escaped woman, who is suspected, with good reason, of being the murderess. There is much evidence, of the circumstantial sort, to indicate her guilt, and much to prove that her revenge was premeditated, long-studied, skilfully-executed, and—that she had a coadjutor of some sort. I have made diligent search, and am convinced that she did not leave the city then, nor since, by any railroad, steamboat, or sailing vessel. Either she is far less unsophisticated than she is represented, or she is ably supported.

I find that her one friend, who might be able, now or later, to throw some light on the subject, is a Dr. Austin, who lives in Fairlie, the former home of Mrs. Armyn, now dead. This man has charge of the missing woman's property, and she may sooner or later apply to him, either directly, or through an agent, for funds. It now becomes necessary to see what manner of man this doctor is, and my next move is to visit Fairlie; I shall go to-night, and my next report may be delayed several days.

Thus ended the report, and the lawyer laid it aside with great care, while quick-witted Kate Seaton thought with blanching cheek, "Good Heavens! Neil Bathurst must connect that skilful death wound, in some way, with Dr. Austin. Poor Lenore! How the plot thickens, and how dark it looks for her."

In order to better understand what Neil Bathurst meant when he informed Mr. Hale that he had made for himself certain notes, setting forth some shadowy suspicions that were not yet to be set forth in reports, let us take a peep into "Mother Goose's Log-Book."

Having talked with Kate Seaton, I felt one-third inclined to believe that Lenore Armyn, as I prefer to call her, is an innocent woman. Having since talked with friends, enemies, and different observers, and having perused dozens of letters written by the accused, I am now prepared to assert—to myself—that she is either a pure-minded, fiery-tempered, but high-souled martyr, or else she is the keenest, cleverest, and most dangerous criminal in America. Just at present the odds seem to favour the latter supposition.

Thus read one entry, and on some of the preceding pages occurred the following:—

Having talked with the Ruthvens; they had held a high opinion of the escaped, but now feel assured of her guilt. There was a marked change in her manner after the engagement was announced; she was silent and reserved; remained much alone, and seldom went out, except with Mrs. Arteveldt and her son. She never refused to go with them, in fact, seemed to desire to be seen with them in public.

Having talked with the widow Warren; she has been turned out by her very sensible brother, and has taken refuge with Miss VanBuren, her worthy associate. It is remarkable that two females, so thoroughly contemptible, could do so much mischief. Miss Armyn would have risen in my estimation if she had killed off the lot. For if she was thus shamefully betrayed, then Clarence, if he died at her hands, did not die a martyr. Nevertheless, justice must be appeased, and I will find this woman if she is atop the earth.

I made the Warren woman and her chum tremble a little, just for my own private satisfaction—told them that they were liable to be arrested at any moment; and so they are, most likely, being what they are. I learned from them that the fugitive seemed averse to meeting me. It seems that I have been mentioned to her on one or two occasions, and each time, if I am to believe these women, she has manifested an emotion that looked like fear. The Warren woman laughed in making her statements, and seemed trying, for some reason, to mislead me. The VanBuren said that she had heard the Warren speak of this peculiarity in the manner of the accused, and on the night of the wedding, just before the direful supper, she overheard Arteveldt speak of my absence in regretful tones, mentioning me, against my expressed wish, as "the detective," whereupon the bride turned very pale, and changed the subject, while the eavesdropper—it is likely—ran off to treat her co-conspirator to this morsel of meaning. If I have never seen Lenore Armyn, she is under the same disadvantage—she has never seen me.

In this, as we know, the detective was mistaken, and to this mistake he would, later, be indebted for a signal defeat.

Another memorandum ran thus:—

I have had a long talk with that rascal Fordham. I am still at a loss to know whether he is most knave or fool. One thing is certain: He knows something concerning Arteveldt's past, that I must get at in some way; if I am not much mistaken, he could put his finger on the writer of those two mysterious unsigned billets. When I asked him if, to his knowledge, Arteveldt had broken off any old love affair to espouse Miss Armyn, he was thrown off his guard for just a second; I could see, by his eyes alone, that he did know of such an affair, and that he meant to keep his knowledge to himself. So he may—if he can.

I can't just make out what interest the veiled woman may or may not have had in this case; her visit was strangely timed, and altogether mysterious.

The case for the accused, at present, stands about like this:—First, her revenge may have been completed when she forsook her husband on her bridal night, and she may have witnesses to prove an alibi.

Second. There is a plausibility in the argument that a sane woman would hardly declare herself so publicly if she contemplated such an afterstroke—but then an infuriated woman does not reason—and I have been convinced that, whatever may be her graces and virtues, she has a volcanic temper. I fancy her now knocking down that poor brute of a Dutchman—if the worst is proven against her, why, it's a splendid case for an "insanity" plea. Any ordinary jury will grant a verdict to that effect—in case of a young and beautiful woman.

Third. Could such a woman have struck so cool and unerring a blow, even if she understood the use of that rather unusual weapon?

Fourth. There is the chance of finding a second party, who might have had a motive for revenge, and there are the two notes, and the secret which, I know, Fordham holds, as clues to work upon. Then there is the half-burned note, written by the murdered man.

On the other hand, every act of the accused, since the day of the scene at Gentleman Jeff's, an account of which I have had from his lips, will tell against her; every act.

Her refusal to dismiss Clarence, at the request of his mother, and the manner of it—her public appearances with Mrs. Arteveldt and son, in order to make their after confusion more marked—her wedding arrangements—the absence of bridesmaids—and more than all, more than enough, her fiery denunciation, and her flight. The story of the knocked down Dutchman will be dragged to light—even her intellect and self poise will tell against her—and her evident aversion to the genus detective, as represented by me, will weigh like iron.

I seem to see the scale going down, down, down! and the life of the beautiful fugitive hanging in the balance.

KINGSTON'S RECORD

For Producing Famous Men and Dodd's Kidney Pills Cures.

Kingston, Dec. 19th.—The Limestone City has given Canada a majority of her greatest and most famous men. Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Oliver Mowat, Sir Geo. Kirkpatrick, Sir Richard Cartwright, and many other notable personalities claim the city as their home.

Kingston is no less famous as the scene of many of the most wonderful and startling cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills, than for the first named reason.

Now another is added to this long list of cures. Mr. Robert Orr, Pine street, reports that after suffering for years with Bladder trouble, Dodd's Kidney Pills completely cured him, though all other remedies had failed. Every city has a similar experience. Dodd's Kidney Pills have cured every time.

DECEMBER WEATHER NOTES.

With a Few Facts as to the Weather of the Past Year.

The December rainfall amounted to .56 of an inch; the snowfall to about 24 inches, giving a total precipitation of 2.97 inches. As compared with December of 1897, the fall of rain was much greater in that month (1897) being 2.82 inches, whilst 20 inches of snow fell.

The mean temperature of the month was almost identical with that of December, 1897, being 23.4 degrees. The highest was 42 degrees on the 30th; the lowest 13 below zero on the 28th. We had zero weather on 5 days.

A heavy snowstorm on the night of the 4th gave good sleighing till the last week of the month, when mild weather with rain dispersed the snow to a great extent.

SOME NOTES ON THE PAST YEAR.

The lowest temperature of the year 1898 was 28 below zero on the 30th January; the highest 97 degrees on July 23rd.

Zero or below was reached on 19 occasions—in January 8 times, February 6 times and December 5 times.

The last appearance of frost in the spring was May 6th; the first appearance of frost in the fall was Sept. 11th. It might be mentioned that there was frost also on July 10th and 11th which, while it did considerable damage in this locality, was much more severe in some other places.

The total precipitation for the year was 33½ inches, a less amount than in 1897. The greatest amount of rain in any one month was October, 5.21 inches; the least in July, .37 of an inch.

One inch and over of rain (or its corresponding amount in snow) in one day, fell on only four occasions.

The month of March 1898, is memorable being the only March without a fall of snow known.

$35,000 FUR BUSINESS
TO BE SOLD.

As we are about to dispose of our Fur Business here this spring in order to consolidate the energy and capital in our Toronto business, (J. & J. Lugsdin)—we find it necessary to at once reduce our large stock of Fine Furs to as low an amount as it is possible, before the 15th of February, 1899.

This means to the people of Peterborough and vicinity an opportunity to purchase High-Class Home-Manufactured Furs from a stock that is recognized as the finest and largest between Toronto and Montreal—and at prices that the shortness of the time—about one month—makes absolutely necessary to sell at a big sacrifice.

Space does not permit us to enumerate the many close quotations we are giving in Fur Coats, Jackets, Cloaks, Capes, Caps, Ruffs, Muffs, Gauntlets, Collarettes, etc. Sufficient to say—that the word "Bargain"—taken at its full meaning—exactly explains the situation.

On Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, while we will be open for business, we will also be going through the whole stock, marking down to sale price every article. On Thursday and following days you can reap the benefit of this two days work.

"Shop early and"——— but 'tis useless to tell interested and sensible people of the advisability of following a course so reasonable.

CROMER TO SHEIKHS.

He Tells Them They Will Be Ruled by Queen and Khedive.

PROTECTORATE OVER EGYPT.

The Sirdar Will Be the Sole Representative of the Two Governments—Moslem Sacred Law to Be Respected and Taxation to Be Moderate and Just—General News by Cable.

Cairo, Jan. 6.—Viscount Cromer, British diplomatic agent in Egypt, and Gen. Lord Kitchener, the Sirdar, have held a reception of the Soudanese Sheikhs and notables at the Sirdar's house at Omdurman.

Lord Cromer, in the course of a long address to the Sheikhs, pointed to the British and Egyptian flags floating together near by, and said: "For the future you will be governed by the Queen and the Khedive. The sole representative in the Soudan of the two Governments will be the Sirdar, in whom both the Queen and the Khedive have the fullest confidence. No attempt will be made to govern the country from Cairo, still less from London."

Then announcing that they must look to the Sirdar alone for good government, Lord Cromer promised them perfect religious freedom, and in reply to a Sheikh's question, assured them that the Moslem sacred law would be applied. He also declared that taxation would be "moderate and just."

It Means a Protectorate.

London, Jan. 6.—The Times, commenting editorially this morning upon Lord Cromer's declarations to the Soudanese Sheikhs at Omdurman, says: "They constitute the plainest assertions of British sovereignty rights in the Soudan yet made."

The Daily Chronicle says: "The speech means a protectorate, and will be so interpreted on the Continent."

The Standard says: "Offence will perhaps be taken at Constantinople at the conspicuous omission of the Sultan's name, but it would be sheer perversity to complicate matters by a formal recognition of an influence which has forever ceased to have any validity in fact or moral right."

FIGHT WITH DERVISHES.

Col. Lewis, in Routing the Emir Fedil, Killed 500 Men.

London, Jan. 6.—Particulars regarding the recent battle on the Blue Nile have been received in a despatch from Cairo to the Exchange Telegraph Company. Col. Lewis, it appears, when he routed the Emir Fedil, the last remaining formidable Dervish chief, killed 500 of his followers and made many prisoners. The Emir, however, succeeded in escaping.

1,500 Captured.

Cairo, Jan. 6.—Col. Lewis defeated Emir Ahmed Fedil on the Blue Nile on Dec. 26. His position was taken by storm and 1,500 Dervishes were captured.

An Official Despatch.

London, Jan. 6.—An official despatch from Col. Lewis says that, with a Soudanese regiment and a detachment of irregular troops, he attacked Fedil while he was crossing the Nile at the cataract south of Rossires. The Colonel's forces stormed the island on which Fedil took up a position and some severe fighting followed. Eventually Fedil fled, with 300 followers, across the river, where his force was dispersed by the Maxim guns. On the British side Major Ferguson, six Egyptian officers and 18 men were wounded and 37 men were killed.

JIMMY BOYLE PROUD OF ENGLAND.

Former Toronto Newspaper Man so Expresses Himself.

London, Jan. 6.—The American consul at Liverpool, Mr. James Boyle, yesterday publicly presented Capt. Brown of the steamer Holywell with a gold watch and chain for rescuing, under trying circumstances and with great gallantry, the captain and several of the crew of the American schooner 76 in the North Atlantic Ocean last September.

Consul Boyle, in making the presentation, said, amid applause, that it gave additional pleasure when American seamen were gallantly rescued by those whom they could call their own kith and kin.

In regard to the gallantry and bravery displayed by British seamen, events of the last few weeks had made the American people prouder than ever of mother England.

France Checked in China.

Shanghai, Jan. 6.—Negotiations between the Viceroy of Nankin and French Consul Bezaure for the cession of additional territory to the French settlement in this city have been abruptly broken off.

The Viceroy has firmly refused to grant any further concessions. This is undoubtedly due to the protest of the American and British ministers to the Pekin Government against extension of the French settlement.

It is reported that the French officials are contemplating hostilities. The Consul has left Nankin on board a warship. The foreign community of Shanghai expects serious trouble of some kind. The French are determined to secure additional territory.

Danes Will Retaliate.

Berlin, Jan. 6.—Serious results in commercial lines are following the action of the Prussian Government in expelling Danes from Schleswig-Holstein. Danish business men have begun to retaliate in earnest by breaking off all relations with German firms. As a result the Berlin Foreign Office is finding fault with officials of Schleswig-Holstein for the severity of the edicts. A grave internal crisis seems to be imminent.

Dreyfus Is Seriously Ill.

London, Jan. 6.—The Daily Telegraph this morning publishes a despatch from Cayenne, capital of French Guiana, South America, saying that former Capt. Dreyfus, now on Devil's Island, has had a serious attack of dysentery, and a physician has been summoned from Cayenne to attend him.

Germany's African Plans.

London, Jan. 6.—The Foreign Office has received from the German Government full plans and explanations of the German expedition to Lake Tchad in Central Africa. This was done in order that there might be no misunderstanding between the two Governments and to show that Germany has no intention of encroaching on England's territorial advances. The Emperor personally pays the expenses of the scientists accompanying the expedition.

WHERE MARTIAL LAW RAN MAD.

The Rectification of Preposterous Sentences by Italian Tribunals.

Rome, Jan. 6.—During the riots of last May the military tribunals, wishing to stamp out the rebellion by terror, committed some curious errors, some of which have now been discovered. One man, who has been for many years absent in America, was condemned to several years' imprisonment as a ringleader. A pitiful case was that of a young servant girl named Marone of Naples, who was accused of having sheltered her student lover who fired at the soldiers from her window. The tribunal acquitted the student, recognizing the faulty nature of the indictment, but sentenced the servant girl to 12 years' imprisonment as his accomplice in a crime the existence of which it had itself denied by the previous acquittal. The glaring stupidity and injustice of this sentence are now recognized after the girl has been seven months in prison, and the King has signed a decree ordering her release. The press comments on this extraordinary fact, sarcastically demanding the rectification of the sentence instead of the royal pardon.

A WONDERFUL WOMAN.

Mrs. Bloomfield Moore of Philadelphia Who Died in London.

London, Jan. 6.—Mrs. Bloomfield Moore of Philadelphia, who was largely interested in the Keeley Motor Company, died at her house in Great Stanhope street here early yesterday. She is believed to have left a large fortune.

Mrs. Bloomfield Moore was a most remarkable woman, and, aside from the publicity she gained by backing Inventor Keeley in his wonderful motor scheme, she held a distinct position in London society as a literary woman, a promoter of science, a philanthropist and a society "grande dame." She presented to Philadelphia, her native city, a valuable collection of works of art as a memorial of her husband. She was a firm believer in the Keeley myth, and not only aided the inventor with money, but also used her pen in his behalf. As far back as 1885 she wrote an article on "Ether and True Protoplasm," which caused much comment in England. Her little song, "Ever," which Sir Arthur Sullivan set to music, has a touch of melancholy, which runs through many poems she wrote.

A Secret Treaty Exists.

London, Jan. 6.—The Shanghai correspondent of The Daily Mail says: "According to Chinese representatives, a secret treaty exists between Great Britain and the United States to prevent any further alienation of Chinese territory."

Italy in the Race.

Rome, Jan. 6.—Next year's naval estimate, it asserted, will provide for eight new battleships, two being of the first class.

WAS HE MURDERED?

The Remains of a Middle-Aged Man Lying at the Foot of Spadina Avenue, Toronto.

Toronto, Jan. 6.—At 1.30 o'clock this morning a Grand Trunk Railway call boy found the mutilated body of a middle-aged man lying at the side of the track at the foot of Spadina avenue. He notified the officials of the round house, and in turn the police were called. There was nothing in the man's pockets that would serve to identify him on the spot. A cheque for $49, signed by D. Rennie & Co., and a business card of Miss Walt, Shuter street, were found in the inside pocket of the overcoat. The body was removed to the Morgue.

The case is a most mysterious one. The man had been battered almost beyond recognition.

The dead man is said to have been an oiler on the Grand Trunk. It is believed that he was "Jack" Emerson, porter, boarding at 349 King street west.

WEST INDIAN DIFFICULTY.

Movement for Developing Trade Relations With Canada.

Kingston, Jamaica, Jan. 6.—The movement for developing trade relations between the West Indies and Canada has now assumed definite proportions. The scheme, which was prepared by the secretary of Governor Hemming, has received the commendation of Mr. Chamberlain, who promises to lay it before the Governments of the West Indian colonies and Canada. The proposal is to raise a fund for a West Indian trade agency in Quebec. The value of the imports into Canada last year which the West Indies could have supplied is estimated at three millions sterling. The amount of produce actually taken there is less than £950,000. It is hoped that the agency will bridge the difference.

Throughout the West Indian colonies, several of which have already contributed their quota of the cost of the establishment of the agency, the greatest rejoicing is manifested at the consideration that beyond the mere improvement of trade an impetus will be given to Imperial federation.

SENATE REFORM.

How the Proposition Is Looked Upon by Winnipeg Politicians.

Winnipeg, Jan. 6.—With regard to Premier Laurier's suggestion as to Senate reform, Hon. J. D. Cameron, Provincial Attorney-General, said: "Sir Wilfrid Laurier's proposition would certainly be an improvement on the present state of affairs. It is very easy to understand that Sir Mackenzie Bowell's position as leader of the Senate practically gives him control of the Parliament of the country. The idea proposed for the reform is a novel one to me."

Hon. Hugh J. Macdonald, interviewed in regard to the matter, said: "Wherever we depart from our English precedents we must go very carefully, so that we may be sure we are going in the right direction. As to the merits of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's proposal, I would not yet like to express an opinion."

After Crooked Druggists.

New York, Jan. 6.—The attention of the Board of Health has been called to the practice of some druggists of using inferior drugs in putting up prescriptions. Health Commissioner Jenkins has instructed the inspectors of the board to take prompt steps to check this practice. It is said that during the recent epidemic of grip some druggists used acetanilid where prescriptions called for phenacetine.

BLIND MAN'S BUFF.

The Origin of This Favorite Sport of Childhood and Youth.

This favorite sport of childhood and youth is of French origin and very high antiquity, having been introduced into England in the train of the Norman conquerors. Its French name, "Colin Maillard," was that of a brave warrior, the memory of whose exploits still lived in the chronicles of the middle ages.

In the year 999 Liege reckoned among its valiant chiefs one Jean Colin. He acquired the name Maillard from his chosen weapon being a mallet, wherewith in fight he used literally to crush his opponents. In one of the feuds which were of perpetual recurrence in those times he encountered the Count de Louvain in a pitched battle, and, so runs the story, in the first onset Colin Maillard lost both his eyes. He ordered his esquire to take him into the thickest of the fight, and, furiously brandishing his mallet, did such fearful execution that victory soon declared itself for him.

When Robert of France heard of these feats at arms, he lavished favors and honors upon Colin, and so great was the fame of the exploit that it was commemorated in the pantomimic representations that formed part of the rude dramatic performances of the age. By degrees the children learned to act it for themselves, and it took the form of a familiar sport.

The blindfolded pursuer, as, with bandaged eyes and extended hands, he gropes for a victim to pounce upon, seems in some degree to repeat the action of Colin Maillard, the tradition of which is also traceable in the name, blind man's bluff.—Philadelphia Press.

His Reason.

Some of the best of Dean Pigon's stories come from Halifax (not Sheffield). One of these concerns his verger, one Sagar. Imagine him, a venerable figure with gray hair, skullcap, gown and verger's staff. In ignorance they had married a man to his deceased wife's sister.

Sagar, whose business it was to settle the matter about the banns, was at once cross examined. "Oh, yes, vicar," said he, "I knowed right well! I knowed parties. "But why did you not tell me?" I should have forbidden them." "Well, vicar, it was just this way, do you see. One of the parties was 84 and t'other 86. I says to myself: 'Lord, it can't last long. Let 'em wed, and bother the laws!'"—London News.

WELL KNOWN VIOLINIST

Traveled Extensively Throughout the Provinces—Interesting Statements Concerning His Experience.

STELLARTON, N.S.—James R. Murray, a well known violinist, of this place, who has traveled extensively throughout the Provinces, makes this statement:

"I was running down in health and my weight fell off from 175 to 150 pounds. Prescriptions did me but little good. My trouble was called nervous dyspepsia. I resorted to Hood's Sarsaparilla and after taking five bottles I was greatly benefited. I feel as well now as ever in my life, and have increased in flesh so that I now weigh 177 pounds. I am well known in this part of the country, having followed my profession, that of a violin musician for the last 26 years. I gladly tell my friends what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for me. Before I began taking the medicine I did not have any ambition, but now all is changed and my dyspeptic trouble perfectly cured." JAMES R. MURRAY.

N. B. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to buy any substitute. Be sure to get Hood's.

Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

THE TWO-CENT RATE AND THE ORGANS.

The Mail and Empire, with a cheek like the face of nature for amplitude, claims credit for forcing Hon. Mr. Mulock to adopt a two-cent postal rate for Canada as a complement of Imperial penny postage, and on this point the Toronto News, politically an evening edition of the regular Conservative organ, says:

"For the speedy manner in which Hon. William Mulock put the two-cent postage rate into effect in Canada, the six millions of Canadians may thank the Conservative press. The absurdity of the present postage tariff was continually kept before the people and the Government. The latter, although claiming that it was the intention to put the two-cent rate into effect at the beginning of the fiscal year, saw that the only way to turn the postage game in their favour was to spring the reduction right away. The Conservative press can therefore claim the credit for forcing the Government to give the people the two-cent rate.

These bumptious journals will have their absurd pretensions exposed, when it is stated that since imperial penny postage declared Mr. Mulock has had the matter of Canadian two-cent postage under decision. Three months ago the officials of the post office were instructed to arrange the issue of stamps with a view to the adoption of a two-cent rate on Jan. 1st—the beginning of the second half of the Government fiscal year. Under the circumstances it would seem that the demands of the Mail and Empire and its political confreres had about as much effect in influencing Mr. Mulock to give Canada the benefit of a two-cent rate, as the whistling of the natural wind. One can sympathize with the the organs. The real causes of complaint against the government, and especially the Post Office Department, are so few that it is a great temptation to tilt at windmills, to set up men of straw for the pleasure of knocking them down, and to invent grievances that have no manner of foundation.

TALKING OFFICERS.

Atlanta, Ga., Journal.

While it may seem to us that the apprehension of the citizens of Canada who expect the scheme of imperialism upon which President McKinley's administration seems bent, to result in an attack upon their country is ridiculous, we must remember that it is based on the declarations of some of our army and navy officers.

We have generals and naval officers of high rank who are talking entirely too much. Almost every day we are informed by one of these garrulous heroes what the government should do and what it should not do.

An army officer or a naval officer is in poor business when he pops up as a stump speaker, or blurts out through newspaper interviews his ideas as to how the government should be conducted. Fortunately we have a civil and not a military government in this country. The exuberance of some of our gold-laced chieftains indicates that they would make it a military government if they could and the tendency towards imperialism has encouraged their hopes and emboldened their utterances.

Take, for instance, the following declaration of General Wilson, made during the recent visit of President McKinley to Macon and in his presence:

"We are too big and powerful and progressive to have neighbours on this continent, and I trust that before the next administration of the President closes the flag will fly over every foot of the continent, from the northern extremity of the Dominion of Canada to the Gulf of Mexico."

It is not unreasonable that a leading newspaper of Canada should accept the expression of such a doctrine by a major-general of the United States army made in the presence of the President and several members of his cabinet and allowed to pass without rebuke or even objection, as indicative of the desire and aim of our government.

There were those present when General Wilson made his foolish speech who should instantly and emphatically have repudiated its sentiments.

The people of Canada are not unreasonable if they apply the rule of silence gives consent in such a case.

It is said that Secretary Long became very much worried over the kissing episodes of Lieutenant Hobson's trip to California, and intimated that for the good of the service he should desist. This is good advice, but it is much more important to call down our military and naval officers, who either in speeches or interviews assume to play the role of critics or directors of the policy of the Government. Silence is a golden gift very often, but it never shines so bright as it does in the refusal of military and naval officers to discuss matters with whose direction they properly have no concern. They are the servants of the civil government.

God forbid that the Government should ever have its policy dictated by military men!

We believe that there is no danger of this now, but that the policy of territorial expansion and military control of outlying provinces tends in that direction cannot be denied or doubted. We can assure the Toronto World and the people of Canada that General Wilson did not speak for the people of the United States in his "raring" speech at Macon.

TIME is coming, says the New York Commercial Advertiser, when we shall copy the present navigation laws of Great Britain, as we shall copy her present tariff laws, as we are now using both tariff and navigation copied from those of the British before changed conditions caused them to be discarded for the present. British laws concerning trade were not changed from sentiment, but from practical gain. That which illuminated her mediæval darkness was enlightened self-interest. We are as keen to see this as the British, and when it shines on us in the same way we shall change our policy. We begin to see it as to the tariff and are becoming ready to discard protection as superfluous. Great Britain discarded it because the interests it helped were less important than those it hurt. It is not hurtful to us in any but the few cases where it increases cost of raw material of manufactures, since we do not import food; but it is rapidly becoming useless.

BILL TO REDUCE EXPRESS CHARGES

The New York Legislature Will Endeavor to Help the People.

Albany, Jan. 6.—It is announced that at the suggestion of the Merchants' Association of New York a bill will be introduced to place the express companies doing business in this State under the supervision of the State railroad commission. This action is based upon the statement that a large part of every dollar paid by the merchants for express charges is exorbitant, and "is exacted to pay a monstrous profit to an unrestricted monopoly." To this end the association introduces a "bill to regulate express companies." The Merchants' Association says that, while freight charges have been greatly reduced in recent years, express charges have undergone nothing like an adequate reduction. A circular sent out declares that on many classes of goods express charges average from 5 to 15 per cent. of the value of the goods.

ROBBED A TREASURER.

$700 Taken From the Custodian of the Argyle, Man., Funds.

Baldur, Man., Jan. 6.—Last night at 8 o'clock a man called at the house of John Harrower, the treasurer of the municipality of Argyle, saying he wished to pay his taxes. He accompanied Harrower to his office, where another man was waiting for them. When Harrower opened the safe to get out the necessary papers he was covered by the thieves with a revolver and tied down to the counter, the thieves having gagged and handcuffed him to prevent him making a noise. In the struggle a revolver went off, the bullet passing through Harrower's hand, but the latter made some marks on one of the men which will materially assist in identification. The amount secured was upwards of $700.

Mr. J. M. Donovan Tells how Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Him.

Peterborough, Dec. 26.—This town is famed throughout the Dominion as the most go-ahead, progressive, wealthy and up-to-date on the continent. This reputation is thoroughly deserved, and was earned by the quickness of the residents to see and to take advantage of a "good thing" when it comes our way.

One especially good thing that our people have benefitted by is the king of kidney cures—Dodd's Kidney Pills—a household remedy in Peterborough.

Among those cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills is Mr. J. M. Donovan, who reports that this remedy cured him completely of Urinary troubles, indicating the first stage of Diabetes.

Topeka, Kas., Jan. 6.—Both branches of the Legislature have passed the bill regulating telegraph rates. The bill will now go to the Governor for his signature. The bill reduces the charge for day commercial messages of ten words from 25c to 15c and other tolls in proportion. Day press rates are reduced from ½c to 1-3c per word and night press rates from ¼c to 1-6c per word. These rates apply to all points within the State. The measure also places telegraph companies within the jurisdiction of the Court of Visitation, recently created to regulate railroad traffic.

A NEW INVENTION
The Newcombe Piano Has It.

It consists of a Patented Practice CLAVIER or STOP which diminishes the tone when required and saves wear on the Piano; it also does away with the old way of having to press down the pedal with the foot in order to soften the tone when running the scales or practicing. Oftentimes the young pupil on the piano cannot press down on the pedal without throwing themselves out of the proper position when they should sit erect. This invention in the NEWCOMBE PIANO will enable children to begin two years earlier on the piano. In addition to the above, the NEWCOMBE PIANO is the finest made in Canada. Children often complain about practicing; they like it if they have a NEWCOMBE PIANO. 1898 styles are gems of art, containing every late improvement; they possess that beautiful full sweet tone which delights the singer, and so pleases every musical ear. Organs of every description at Wholesale Prices.

Big Bargains now on hand in slightly used, Upright and Square Pianos of the various makes taken in part exchange for the famous NEWCOMBE PIANOS. Every NEWCOMBE PIANO has a new registered scale and the warranty is cast in the plate. For correct and full information regarding the new invention and NEWCOMBE PIANOS, write to our Direct Representative. Easy Prices. Liberal Terms.

AGUINALDO IS ACTIVE.

Filipino President Will Resist the Americans at Iloilo.

HE HOLDS 11,000 SPANISH.

President McKinley's Proclamation to the Philippines—It Recites the Facts of the War, Declares the U. S. Must Have Possession, and That the Military Government Established Will be Firm.

Paris, Jan. 6.—An official telegram received by the Filipino Junta here, dated Manila, Jan. 4, says that Aguinaldo has gone to Iloilo, at the request of the insurgents there, to place himself at their head with the view of possible fighting with the Americans.

The despatch gives the make up of the Filipino Cabinet, covered some time ago by the Associated Press, and says: The Cabinet is described as homogeneous, every member being pledged, according to these advices, to resist the American military occupation of the Philippines.

A member of the Filipino Junta here explains that Aguinaldo did not run away, but "left Manila for the mountainous regions behind Cavite, in order to make secret arrangements for his voyage to Iloilo."

Mabani, President of the Cabinet and Foreign Affairs Minister, claims recognition of the independence of the Philippine Islands and will not consent to the release of the Spanish prisoners. But he is willing to come to an understanding with the Americans, "as allies," for the surrender of the Spanish military and civil officials and others.

Aguinaldo Holds 11,000 Prisoners.

Vienna, Jan. 6.—The Nues Weiner Tageblatt publishes this morning a statement received by Prof. Blumentritt from a friend of Aguinaldo, who says that the latter holds as prisoners 11,000 Spanish troops, including two generals, 40 staff officers and 100 superior officers. He has also 1,900 civilians, including several provincial governors and numerous officials.

Official From Manila.

Madrid, Jan. 6—The following official despatch has been received from Manila: "The insurgents refuse to liberate the prisoners on the demand of the Americans, claiming that this might be construed as an act of submission to the United States. With regard to liberating the monks, the insurgents intend to negotiate with the Vatican directly. Gen. Rios has now opened direct negotiations with the insurgents concerning the prisoners."

Aguinaldo Still President.

Manila, Jan. 6.—Although the insurgent government at Malolos has been reconstituted, Aguinaldo is still President of the Filipino Republic. A despatch from Malolos says that a majority of the members of the new Cabinet belong to the militant wing of the party.

McKINLEY'S PROCLAMATION.

Text of the Message of the United States to the Philippines.

Washington, Jan. 6.—The following is the text of the instructions sent to General Otis, in command of the United States forces in the Philippines, to be proclaimed to the Filipinos as expressive of the purposes of the United States with respect to them:

"The destruction of the Spanish fleet in the harbor of Manila by the United States naval squadron commanded by Rear-Admiral Dewey, followed by the reduction of the city and the surrender of the Spanish forces, practically effected the conquest of the Philippine Islands and the suspension of Spanish sovereignty therein.

"With the signature of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain, by their respective plenipotentiaries at Paris on the 10th inst., and as the result of the victories of American arms, the future control, disposition and government of the Philippine Islands are ceded to the United States.

Must Have Possession.

"In fulfillment of the rights of sovereignty thus acquired, and the responsible obligations of government thus assumed, the actual occupation and administration of the entire group of the Philippine Islands becomes necessary, and the military government therefore maintained by the United States in the city, harbor and bay of Manila is to be extended with all possible despatch to the whole of the ceded territory.

"In performing this duty the military commander of the United States is enjoined to make known to the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands that in succeeding to the sovereignty of Spain, in severing the former political relations of the inhabitants, and in establishing a new political power, the authority of the United States is to be exerted toward the security of the persons and property of the people of the islands, and for the confirmation of all their private rights and relations. It will be the duty of the commander of the forces of occupation to announce and proclaim in the most public manner that we come, not as invaders or conquerors, but as friends, to protect the natives in their homes, in their employments and in their personal and religious rights.

Rule Will Be Firm.

"All persons who either by active aid or by honest submission co-operate with the Government of the United States to give effect to these beneficent purposes will receive the reward of its support and protection. All others will be brought within the lawful rule we have assumed, with firmness, if need be, but without severity so far as may be possible. Within the absolute domain of military authority, which necessarily is and must remain supreme in the ceded territory until the legislation of the United States shall otherwise provide, the municipal laws of the territory in respect to private rights and property and the repression of crime are to be considered as continuing in force, and to be administered by the ordinary tribunals so far as practicable.

Private Property Respected.

"While the control of all the public property and the revenues of the state passes with the cession, and while the use and management of all public means of transportation are necessarily reserved to the authority of the United States, private property, whether belonging to individuals or corporations, is to be respected, except for cause duly established. The taxes and duties heretofore payable by the inhabitants to the late Government, become payable to the authorities of the United States, unless it be seen fit to substitute for them other reasonable rates or modes of contribution to the expenses of government, whether general or local.

All Ports Opened.

"All ports and places in the Philippine Islands in the actual possession of the land and naval forces of the United States will be opened to the commerce of all friendly nations. All goods and wares, not prhibited for military reasons by due announcement of the military authority, will be admitted upon payment of such duties and other charges as shall be in force at the time.

Its Benevolent Purpose.

"Finally, it should be the earnest and paramount aim of the military administration to win the confidence, respect and affection of the inhabitants of the Philippines by assuring them in every possible way that full measure of individual rights and liberties which is the heritage of free peoples, and by proving to them that the mission of the United States is one of benevolent assimilation, substituting the mild sway of justice and right for arbitrary rule. In the fulfillment of this high mission supporting the temperate administration of affairs for the greatest good of the governed, there must be sedulously maintained the strong arm of authority to repress disturbance and to overcome all obstacles to the bestowal of blessings of good and stable government upon the people of the Philippine Islands under the free flag of the United States. (Signed) McKinley."

"Chinese Immigration."

The value of a debating club for young men is indicated every week at the Y.M.C.A. Each succeeding meeting seems to surpass in interest the preceding ones. At the regular meeting last evening the subject for debate was Resolved—"That the Government of Canada is justified in passing legislation to totally exclude Chinese immigration into Canada." Messrs. A. C. McCallum and F. Ray supported the affirmative, and Messrs. W. H. Hill and A. E. Dixon the negative. All the speeches were able and the facts well presented. Mr. W. H. Collier as chairman, decided the debate in favour of the negative, and in his scholarly summing up, pointed out the classes to which the arguments set forth belonged. These presented are the result 1, of observation; 2, heresay; 3, the competent judgment of others. An open discussion followed, which was participated in by Messrs. W. B. Bamford, Hall, McGowan, Owen and Bell. The programme for next Thursday evening, Jan. 12th, is to consist of "Two papers on the history of 1898," to be presented by Messrs. Jos. McGowan and Chas. Anderson, the same to be duly discussed.

"An Enemy to the King" is announced as one of the forthcoming attractions, which will be seen at the Opera House Tuesday, January 10. Probably no play upon the American stage to-day has created the widespread interest that has been allotted to "An Enemy of the King." When first produced by E. H. Sothern at the Lyceum Theatre, New York, its success was electric, and the fame of its author—R. N. Stephens—was made in a single night. The original production in its entirity will be given by John Griffith and a specially selected company, rehearsed by Mr. Sothern himself. Seats are now on sale. 1d

A DISTINGUISHED CLERGYMAN IS DEAD.

DEATH OF BISHOP SULLIVAN, RECTOR OF ST. JAMES, TORONTO.

Brief Sketch of the Well Known Clergyman's Useful Life.

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 6th—Right Rev. E Sullivan, D.D., rector of of St. James "Anglican" Cathedral, and formerly Bishop of the Diocese of Algoma, died this morning.

[Rt. Rev. Edward Sullivan, D.D., whose death, announced above, has not been unexpected, was one of the best known clergymen of the English Church communion. He was a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin. He began his life work for the Church in London township, Huron diocese, Here he laboured from 1858 to 1860. He was assistant at St. George's, Montreal, from 1863 to 1866, and during his work here he achieved a deservedly high popularity, which was practically recognized afterwards, for after occupying the position of Rector of Trinity church, New York, from 1866 to 1879, he was made Rector of St. Georges—of the parish where he had formerly been assistant. In 1866 at a meeting of the Provincial Synod convened for the purpose of appointing a successor to the late Rt. Rev. Dr. Fauquier, Bishop of Algoma, Dr. Sullivan made one of his characteristically strong speeches, in the course of which he expressed the deep conviction that in spite of the great hardships and difficulties of the field, the position of missionary bishop of Algoma was a most honourable one and should be gladly accepted by whomever was elected. Most unexpectedly to himself the Synod gave him an opportunity of self application of his ideas of duty in the premises, by electing him bishop of Algoma. After prayerful deliberation he unreservedly accepted, giving up his lucrative and comparatively luxurious position of rector of St. George's for the hardships, toil and anxiety of the mission field. He was consecrated on June 29th, 1869, at St. George's, Montreal. His act of self sacrifice (from a human point of view) aroused considerable missionary interest at the time, and called particular attention to Algoma. With his characteristic energy he threw himself into the exacting work of the Diocese, and energetically compassed the collection of the necessary funds. At length the physical exposure to which he was subjected, and his unremitting hard work, together with the anxieties incident to the conscientious discharge of a great trust, attended with difficulties insuperable to any but extraordinary ability and zeal, caused a breakdown of health. He was compelled to seek rest and, resigning his bishopric with the greatest reluctance, he went to the south of Europe in the hope of regaining the health and strength he had lost in the far north of Canada. His health however, was never completely restored, but sufficiently to admit of his accepting the position of rector of St. James Cathedral, Toronto, to which he was appointed on the retirement of Rev. Canon Dumoulin to accept the bishopric of Niagara. In this work he has passed a most successful career and won great popularity, not only among his flock, but among the citizens of Toronto. Bishop Sullivan was an eloquent preacher, one of the most powerful orators of the Anglican communion in Canada. His splendid physique, rich resonant voice impressive manner and weighty thoughtful matter will long remain delightful memories to those who have heard him. His special Lenten addresses delivered in Toronto at mid-day attracted great attention, and the large number of workingmen that attended and were enthralled by his eloquence showed that he was as much at his best among the masses as on the floor of the Synod or on the platform of some great gathering. During the approaching season of Lent his voice will be missed, but there is the greatest hope that it will be heard in a higher sphere. A light of the Church has been called to rest.

Bishop Sullivan has long been affected with an internal trouble, but it was only recently that he was compelled to take to his bed. He was only 56 years of age at the time of his death.

The deceased gentleman is associated with Peterborough through the fact that his second wife was a resident of Ashburnham at the time of her marriage—Miss Rencan, neice of Mr. A. H. Campbell, of Toronto, who at that time occupied "St. Leonards," Ashburnham, Bishop Sullivan was in Peterborough about 10 years ago, when he gave an address in St. John's and a year ago last autumn he preached an eloquent harvest festival sermon in St. John's.

LITTLE LAKE CEMETERY.

A Little Analysis of the Record of Interments Last Year.

In another column is printed a list of the interments at the Little Lake Cemetery during the past year, with interesting details. There are some matters worthy of note. One is the pleasing fact that the total interments were this year 15 fewer than last year, the interments being 158 this year as against 173 in 1897. As to ages the extremes of life were most fatal. Of the 158 interred, 50 were under five years of age, and 64 were between the half century mark and the century mark. It is also to be remarked that there is no increase in the rate of consumptives. In 1889 out of 156 interments, 19 deaths were due to consumption. Last year out of 150 interments the death of only 16 is credited to consumption. As time goes on the number of native-born Canadians increases; the number ten years ago was 80 out of 156, last year the number was 105 out of 158.

BIBLE CLASSES.

Which are to be conducted on Saturday Afternoons.

The Home Reading Union wish it to be understood that, whilst under given under their auspices, these classes are open to all, both men and women, who wish to attend them.

This year's course will be an "Introduction to the Study of the Bible," and the first lecture will describe the scope and methods of the whole course. Those attending will find it convenient to bring Bibles and note book.

PRINCIPAL'S REPORT.

The following report was submitted:

To the Separate School Board, Peterborough:

GENTLEMEN,—I beg leave to make the following report concerning the Christmas promotion examinations at the Murray street school.

As already explained at the last meeting of your Board, the promotion examinations were not held in all the rooms of the school, nor were promotions made from room to room. I might again state that this was owing to the following reasons:

(1) That in some rooms there were three classes or divisions, and hence it was not possible for the teachers to properly cover the limit of the work laid down for their classes in four months.

(2) That in those rooms where no promotions were made at Christmas and in classes preparing for promotion from room to room, at the June examinations there were very few, and in most cases, no failures. Therefore no injustice was done any of the pupils by not having them promoted at Christmas.

In the following rooms promotions were made:

Miss Ryan's—

From Class A to Jr Part I—11 pupils.
From Jr Part I to Sr Part II—30 pupils.

Miss Cahill's—

From Sr Part I to Jr Part II—30 pupils.
From Jr Part II to Sr Part II—15 pupils.

Miss Deasaard's—

From Jr II to Sr II—11 pupils.
From Sr Part II to Jr II—16 pupils.

I might also add that the classification of the school is now on the best basis possible, there being in each room only two divisions or classes except in the lowest department, where it is not possible to have less than three classes.

Under the present plan of classification we shall, therefore, be able in the future to have promotion examinations twice a year.

Yours respectfully,

E. JONES.

The Finance Committee reported through Dr. Moher, chairman, recommending payment of the account of A. H. Stratton for $12 77. The report was adopted.

The Property Committee were instructed to ask for tenders for a supply of wood.

Miss Doran was re-engaged for the balance of the term.

REV. FATHER CHIDWICK.

He Receives an Important New U. S. Government Chaplaincy.

Rev. Father Chidwick's visit to Peterborough recently will be remembered with pleasure by a great many persons, who will also be pleased to learn that his past services have received substantial recognition. The following which appears, accompanied with an excellent double column portrait, in the current issue of the New York Catholic News, will be read with interest:

The Rev. John P. Chidwick, who was chaplain of the Maine when she was blown up in Havana harbour on Feb. 15th last, has received a mark of distinction from the Navy Department in the appointment to be chaplain of the Washington Navy Yard. This appointment, which took effect on January 4th, is regarded in the service as a most desirable one.

Father Chidwick is perhaps the best known chaplain in the navy. His work after the loss of the Maine was particularly heroic. In the work of rescuing and ministering to the needs of the wounded men taken from the wreck, Father Chidwick so conducted himself as to win the admiration of all who witnessed his heroic devotion to duty. A despatch to the New York Sun from Havana, a few days after the disaster, said:

"The self-sacrifice of Chaplain Chidwick deserves all praise. He is at the Machina wharf, paper and pencil in hand, taking notes of the smallest special marks on the bodies as they are taken from the water, in order to obtain all clues to their identification. Since the disaster he has not rested a moment. When he is not examining bodies and helping to recover others he is consoling the wounded at the hospital. After the bodies are taken from the water the chaplain makes a short prayer and then they are placed in the coffins."

Many other tributes to Father Chidwick's nerve, endurance and self-sacrifice were printed at that time. Amid scenes and experiences which sickened and incapacitated for duty many stronger men, the young priest carried himself, as one correspondent expressed it, "like a man of iron." After devoting himself all day to the difficult task of identifying the unfortunate victims of the explosion, Father Chidwick spent his nights with the wounded in the hospital, where he was indefatigable in his efforts to comfort and minister to their wants. A despatch from Captain Sigsbee, the Maine's commander, to the Navy Department on Feb. 24th, said: "Chaplain Childwick charged with all matters relative to the dead. His conduct is beyond praise."

Rev. John P. Chidwick was born in New York city thirty-five years ago. He was educated in a parochial school and later went through Manhattan College. He then left Manhattan College, and after a term in St. Joseph's Seminary, of Troy, in December, 1887, was ordained to the priesthood and assigned to duty at St. Stephen's church, where he remained seven years. He was appointed a chaplain of the United States navy in March, 1895, and was detailed on the Maine in October of the same year. Chaplain Chidwick was the third Catholic chaplain appointed to the navy. While at St. Stephen's he endeared himself to all, and at his departure there was universal regret.

Father Chidwick is one of two sons of a widowed mother, to whom he is most devoted. He has a sister, a nun, Sister Geraldine, in St. Joseph's Hospital, Peterborough, Canada. His brother is engaged in this city. John B. Chidwick, his father, was a builder. He died just as Father Chidwick received his commission as chaplain.

In the two years in which Father Chidwick had served as chaplain on the Maine the relations between the priest and the crew were of the most affectionate character. In an interview given by Father Chidwick to a representative of the New York World he paid the following tribute to the men who comprised his flock on the battleship:

"Never did a clergyman derive greater comfort from his flock than I received from the crew of the late United States steamship Maine. I have often heard our officers say that they had never sailed with a crew of better men, and I firmly believe the statement. They were loyal and brave men and attentive to my ministrations."

Among the personal effects which the chaplain lost in the disaster was a gold chalice, which the crew of the Maine had presented to him in token of their attachment and appreciation. This chalice was recovered by a diver later.

WEDDING BELLS.

Celebration of the Thorndyke-Armstrong Nuptials.

A very interesting event took place on Wednesday last at the residence of Mr. D. S. Armstrong, 3rd line, Cavan, it being the marriage of his daughter, Miss Bella Armstrong, to Mr. Chas. Thorndyke of Millbrook.

The bride was supported by her cousin, Miss Sarah Atkins, and the groom by Mr. David Armstrong.

Rev. Mr. Johnston performed the ceremony.

Only the immediate friends of the bride and groom were present. After the ceremony had been performed a pleasant social evening was enjoyed by the guests until a late hour when the newly married couple left for their home in Millbrook, and the other guests to their respective homes.

A varied selection of beautiful and useful presents were presented to the bride.

OBITUARY.

Death of Mrs. George Croft.

Intelligence was received this morning of the death at Orillia on Thursday of the widow of the late George Croft, at one time of Peterborough, and mother-in-law of Mr. F. J. Daly, formerly proprietor of the Grand Central Hotel, now of Orillia. The remains will be interred in the Roman Catholic Cemetery, Peterborough. The funeral will be from the Grand Trunk station on the arrival of the mid-day train on Saturday, Jan 7th.

Death of a Pioneer in Norwood on Thursday Last.

There passed away yesterday at 3 p.m. in Norwood, Mr. Henry Kirkpatrick, perhaps the oldest citizen of the village.

The deceased came to Norwood about 50 years ago from County Donegal, Ireland. He was a public school teacher in this district for many years, and afterwards spent some time as salesman and bookkeeper in various stores in Norwood.

He leaves a sorrowing widow and five children to mourn his decease, one son, Mr. L. H. Kirkpatrick, of the firm of Kirkpatrick & Buck, Norwood, and Miss Mary Kirkpatrick, public school teacher, of Orillia, children of a second marriage and unmarried, and three older daughters, married, Mrs. H. Doughty, Toronto, Mrs. John Harper, and Mrs. George Jones, of Norwood, children of a first marriage.

The funeral takes place Saturday at 2 p.m., to the Norwood Cemetery.

SUPPOSED POISONING.

Death of a Little Son of Mr. P. E. C Cooper, Formerly of Peterborough.

A Brisbin, Australia, exchange contains the following item of news which will be received with regret by many in Peterborough:

"It was reported to the local police that a little boy named R. C. Cooper, 8 years of age, died suddenly about 7 o'clock on Sunday morning at his father's residence, Hamilton. It appears that the little boy had not been well for the past week. On Saturday he went to meet his father at 2 o'clock, and when he returned home he was taken ill, and commenced vomiting. His father then gave him a spoonful of castor oil. Subsequently Dr. Jackson was sent for, and arrived about 10 p.m. Dr. Jackson also called to see the deceased at 1, and again at 6 on Sunday morning, but the unfortunate boy suddenly succumbed about 7 a.m. Mr. Cooper stated that the boy had been in the habit of eating peaches which were growing in the garden, some of them being unripe. Dr. Jackson has, however, reported to the police that the child showed symptoms of having taken an irritant poison. A post-mortem examination was held by Dr. Brookway, who gave a certificate that death was due primarily to gastro-enteritis, and part of the intestines has been sent to the Government analyst for examination."

Mr. P. E. C. Cooper, the father of the little lad, will be remembered as being formerly connected with the local branch of the Bank of Toronto. Mrs. Cooper was a Miss MacNab, and a niece of Mrs. Meade, Ashburnham.

PERSONAL.

Mr. and Mrs. G. Larmouth have returned home after a pleasant visit with friends in Havelock and Norwood.

Mrs. Thos. Chittick and her daughter, Mrs. Whitfield, of Morden, Manitoba, are visiting Miss Armstrong, 411 George street.

Mr. F. Peate, recently a student at the C. G. E., has assumed the management of the Prescott Electric Light Co. His friends here will doubtless wish him success in his good appointment.

The Colts go to Lakefield to-night to play their first championship match with the Lakefield team. The Colts will be: Goal, Willis McDonnell; point, Eddie Graham; cover point, Harold Armstrong, capt.; forwards, Harry King, Stanley Bradd, Harry Morgan, Hubert McBain. Mr. E. Percy Brown, of Toronto, has been appointed by the O.H.A. to officiate as referee. The boys leave at 5 30 and quite a crowd of supporters will accompany them.

DOG SHOW NEXT WEEK.

There Will be Enough Bark to Start a Tannery—Many Entries Received.

The last entry received for the dog show was that from Mr. Fred Miller, of Trenton, who is sending a string of 15 dogs. The entries now aggregate between 175 and 180. The carpenters are busy erecting the benching in the Market Hall. The show will be held on Wednesday and Thursday of next week.

A SUCCESSFUL PETERBOROUGH BOY.

Walter S. Cottingham Becomes General Manager of the Sherwin Williams Paint Company.

Peterborough boys generally manage to keep at the front of the procession. Another example is in Mr. Walter S Cottingham. He will be well remembered in Peterborough as associated with the hardware business about eighteen years ago. In 1882 he removed to Montreal and after a time went into business for himself. A couple of years ago the Sherin Williams Paint Company acquired his business and appointed him manager for Canada. Mr. Cottingham has now been made general manager of the company for the continent with headquarters at Cleveland. Canadian brains, Canadian steadiness, Canadian reliability bring recognition. Our shrewd Yankee cousins want the best and they know what they are doing when they prefer and promote a Canuck.

HE WAS APPRECIATED.

The Fire Brigade Convey Their Thanks to Mr. J. M. White.

Councillor J. M. White, who has occupied the position of chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee during the year, is in receipt of the appended pleasing testimonial from the members of the Fire Department:

J. M. White, Esq., Peterborough, Ont.:

DEAR SIR,—At the annual meeting of the Peterborough Protection Fire Brigade, held in their hall on the night of January 2nd, 1899, I was instructed by resolution, unanimously adopted, to convey to you the thanks of the Brigade, for the many kindness shown to us, and the interest manifested in the Brigade by you, as chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee. Your active interest and intelligent co-operation was deeply appreciated by the Brigade, and they desire you to accept their sincere thanks. With best wishes for a happy and prosperous New Year, I am,

Yours sincerely,

J. H. YELLAND, Sec. P.P.F.B.

Needless to say Mr. White fully appreciates this expression of good will on the part of the Brigade.

HUMAN SACRIFICES

On the Altar of Diabetes, Saved by Dodd's Kidney Pills, Only.

Hardly a family in the country is free from Diabetes. Great thirst, failing sight, numbness in the thighs, bleeding gums, swollen ankles, emaciation, nervousness, pale or turbid urine, loss of sexual power, decaying teeth, pains in the loins or small of the back, are all positive signs that Diabetes is in the system.

Do you know how it ends? In DEATH. A premature, horrible, agonized, pitiful death. The victim has no peace, no ease in life. His days are filled with tortures. His nights are waking dreams of agony. He longs to die, yet fears the terrors of his end. He dies, a bloated, fetid, repulsive mass of corruption. That is the only end of unchecked Diabetes. Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure it. They drive it out of the system thoroughly, create new, clean blood, rebuild the diseased kidneys, and restore robust health.

WHEN NAPOLEON WALKED.

An Incident of the Memorable Retreat From Moscow.

It was on Nov. 25, at about 7 o'clock in the morning, when we saw the head of the column. The first we saw were generals, a few of whom were on horseback, but the majority on foot. The latter painfully dragged themselves along, almost all having their feet frozen and bound up in rags and pieces of sheepskin and dying of hunger. We then saw what was left of the cavalry of the guard. The emperor came next on foot, with a stick in his hand. He was muffled up in a large capote lined with fur and wore on his head an amaranthine velvet cap edged with black foxskin. On his right marched, also on foot, King Murat; on his left, Prince Eugene, vicesoy of Italy; then Marshals Berthier, prince of Neufchatel; Ney, Mortier, Lefebvre and other marshals and generals, whose corps had been partly destroyed.

They were followed by 700 to 800 officers and subofficers, marching in order and bearing in the greatest silence the eagles of the regiments to which they had belonged and that had so often led them to victory. They were the remnant of over 60,000 men. My poor Picart, who had not seen the army for a month, gazed on silently, but his convulsive movements showed only too well what he felt. I saw big tears roll down the cheeks and fall on his mustache, from which icicles were hanging. Then, turning to me, "Really, compatriot, I do not know whether I am asleep or awake; I weep because I have seen our emperor marching on foot, a stick in his hand, he that was so great and who made us so proud!" "Memoires of Sergent Bourgogne."

Few Class Distinctions in Siberia.

There is not much caste or class distinction in Siberia, and the few social rules are lax. The Russian Siberians mingle freely with the native tribes, and their customs and habits have, in consequence, been considerably modified. I have often seen groups of boys playing on the street where the Kirghis or Buriat boys were mixed indiscriminately with the Russians. From their dress or language it was impossible to distinguish them, for both costume and language were a strange mixture. Only the peculiar features of the native or the more slovenly appearance of the Russian would betray the slightest difference. It is an old saying that you "scratch a Russian and find a Tartar." It might be more appropriately said—at least, of the Russian peasant—that you scrape the dirt off a Russian and find a clean Tartar, for the latter are decidedly the more cleanly.—St. Nicholas.

The First Celebration of Christmas.

Christmas was first celebrated in the year 98, but it was 40 years later before it was officially adopted as a Christian festival. Nor was it until about the fifth century that the day of its celebration became permanently fixed on the 25th of December. Up to that time it had been irregularly observed at various times of the year—in December, in April and in May, but most frequently in January.—Ladies' Home Journal.

FOUR COMPANIES IN

The Great Canadian Loan Trust in the City of Toronto.

A MAMMOTH AMALGAMATION.

The Canada Permanent, Western Canada, London & Ontario and the Freehold Join Hands Under One Management—An Economy of Management Expected as a Result of the Combination.

Toronto, Jan. 5.—What has long been predicted in regard to the loan companies of Ontario is now about to take place, viz., a movement in the direction of consolidation in order to reduce expenses and indirectly to make the returns to the shareholders better.

Yesterday the first of these movements was made public in the consolidation of four of five great companies, with headquarters in this city.

On Friday, Dec. 30 last, a meeting was held in the board room of Gooderham & Worts, Limited, of a joint committee, consisting of three members from each of the following companies: The Canada Permanent Loan & Savings Company, the Western Canada Loan & Savings Company, the Freehold Loan & Savings Company and the London & Ontario Investment Company, at which it was decided that it was advisable to consolidate these companies and to procure a charter at the next session of Parliament to take over their assets at a valuation.

This resolution was subsequently confirmed by the four boards, and at a meeting held yesterday arrangements were made for the valuation of the assets and for the formation of the new company, the provisional directors of which will be: Mr. George Gooderham, Mr. J. Herbert Mason, Mr. W. H. Beatty, Mr. W. S. Lee, Mr. Ralph K. Burgess, Mr. W. D. Matthews, Mr. T. Sutherland Stayner, Hon. S. C. Wood, Mr. C. H. Gooderham, Mr. George Lewis, Mr. A. M. Cosby and Mr. Frederick Wyld.

It was decided that upon the provisional organization of the new company Mr. George Gooderham should be president, Mr. J. Herbert Mason first vice-president, Mr. W. H. Beatty second vice-president, and that Mr. Walter S. Lee should be manager.

The consolidation having been agreed upon the necessary steps will be taken to carry it out with all convenient speed.

The capital of the new company will be composed of the combined paid-up capital of the four, almost intact, as follows:

Canada Permanent	$2,600,000
Western	1,500,000
Freehold	1,319,100
London and Ontario	550,000
Total	$5,969,100

The total investments of the four companies equal $26,000,000.

KINGSTON'S RECORD

For Producing Famous Men and Dodd's Kidney Pills Cures.

Kingston, Dec. 19th.—The Limestone City has given Canada a majority of her greatest and most famous men. Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Oliver Mowat, Sir Geo. Kirkpatrick, Sir Richard Cartwright, and many other notable personalities claim the city as their home.

Kingston is no less famous as the scene of many of the most wonderful and startling cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills, than for the first named reason.

Now another is added to this long list of cures. Mr. Robert Orr, Pine street, reports that after suffering for years with Bladder trouble, Dodd's Kidney Pills completely cured him, though all other remedies had failed. Every city has a similar experience. Dodd's Kidney Pills have cured every time.

A Bonfield Arrest.

The late John Bonfield was one of the bravest men who ever served on the Chicago police force. Dyer Scanlan was one of the most desperate criminals of his time. Being wanted for a crime, he fled to his house with Molly Mott, a criminal as well known as he was. The two barricaded the door of a room on the second floor. When the police arrived, they opened fire upon them through the panels. The officers scattered and betook themselves out of range of the bullets. Matters were at a standstill when Bonfield, who was then captain of police, arrived on the scene.

Quickly procuring a bedtick, he wound it around his left arm. Covering his heart with the improvised shield, he drew his revolver and ascended the stairs. Scanlan heard him approaching and called through the closed door, "Who's that?"

"Bonfield," was the answer.

Scanlan turned to his companion, and flinging down his gun said, "It's all up, Molly."

The door was thrown open and the two criminals surrendered to the only man they knew they could neither beat nor baffle.

Princess Beatrice and the Dean.

A story relates to Princess Beatrice, who, when a little girl, used to play at cooking. She had on one occasion made some cakes which were more than usually bad, and all her friends declined to taste them. "Very well, then," said the little princess, "as Dr. Stanley is not here I shall give them to the donkey." The late Dean Stanley was a great favorite with the queen's younger children; he had so many entertaining stories to tell. Princess Beatrice was well aware that he had neither taste nor smell, hence she considered him a most proper person for the consumption of doubtful pasties.—Westminster Gazette.

A Sure Cure For Consumption.

There is no such thing. Scott's Emulsion comes the nearest to it, but even that will not cure advanced cases, but taken in time it will cure this disease.

Too Suggestive of Luxury.

"Doctor," said the member of parliament for a rural district, "are you sure it's gout that has attacked me?"

"Positive. But you needn't be alarmed. It's nothing very serious."

"Doctor, you don't appreciate the situation. You don't know what a prejudice against gout there is in my community. I don't ask you to do anything contrary to your conscience, but if I manage to get the story started that I caught my toe in a piece of machinery think of my prospects and the welfare of your country and don't contradict it."—London Tit-Bits.

PA AND FREDDIE ABOARD.

An Exciting Time For Which There Was Really No Occasion.

As a passenger train on the Hannibal was pulling out a tall countryman, incumbered with four bundles, a scythe snath, an ax handle, a bag of bananas and a small boy, came out of the depot and began to take his bearings. Up and down the tracks his gaze wandered, up and down the long lines of coaches drawn up under the sheds, and at last, as the rear coach was passing him, he caught sight of the moving train.

"Come on, Freddie! Thar she goes!" he yelled and began to transfer some of his belongings from his right hand to his left as he ran. Freddie made an amazing record for one whose legs were so short, and they were soon beside the steps on the rear end of the last coach. There was a man standing on the platform.

"Hay, stop 'er, stop 'er!" cried Freddie's pa. "Put on that ar wind brake, mister! Pull that ar rope up over your head and make 'er stop!"

But the man only reached down and caught Freddie, who was leaping and swinging and dragging by turns in his vain efforts to make his short legs stretch far enough to get his feet on the lower step. Pa held on to him with one hand and the man on the platform finally succeeded in drawing him up. Pa slung the banana bag after him. It slid on across the platform and went overboard on the other side. Pa made a leap for the steps, dropped a bundle and stooped to pick it up. The recovery of the bundle took but a second, but the train was getting well under way and was a tail's length ahead when he began the chase again. One wild spurt, with his coattails standing out behind him, a reckless leap, and pa, too, was aboard, but a bundle containing an undershirt had been lost in the tussle.

An employee of the depot picked the bundle up, and a section man who happened by appropriated the bananas to his own refreshment. The crowd that had breathlessly awaited the result of the race melted away, and the depot attendants, who had been preparing to pick pa up with shovels, went about their duties.

Half an hour later a very angry man came prancing down the depot platform. He was holding a small boy by one hand, and the ends of an ax handle and scythe snath protruded from under his arm.

It was pa. He approached a depot official and said:

"Why didn't you tell me that warn't the Wabash? I wanted the Wabash; that's what I wanted."

The official tenderly handed pa his new undershirt and replied in the soft tones that soothe the ruffled soul:

"I believe you forgot to ask me."—Kansas City Times.

DIALECT.

Critics, pray do not reject
What is writ in dialect,
For the common people's thought
Should in common speech be wrought.
And the crude but pungent word
Should be written as it's heard.
Wise or foolish, if 'tis true,
That should be enough for you!
With man's speech, is something blent
Caught from his environment—
Strong, rebellious and the schools
Only scotch it with their rules.
Man may fashion a disguise
Baffling to his neighbors' eyes,
But upon his tongue will be
Stamped his true identity.
Therefore, critics, pray reject
Nothing writ in dialect
Which in story or in rhyme
Is a record of the time,
Vital, fresh and fit to be Found in honest company.

I began to take Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and since that time have been working every day, although a man nearly 70 years of age. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills have cured me.

"IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY."

To Wm. McCabe, Esq., Managing Director, North American Life Assurance Co., Toronto:

DEAR SIR.—Your official notice came duly to hand, apprising me of the results obtainable upon my 15 year endowment Policy in your Company for $1,000 which matured on the 5th inst. Of the various options you have given me viz.:

Cash value	$1,564 98
Paid-up Policy, payable, at my death, for	2,560 00
Yearly Income for life of	166 20

I have decided upon the cash value; and it gives me pleasure to testify that, as I anticipated it would be when I took out the policy, IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY. This returns me the full premiums of the 15 years and over 4½ per cent. compound interest, in addition to which you have carried the risk upon my life. In view of the lower ing rates of interest which have been obtai able dur ng the latter portion of the period, it is difficult to see how this excellent result could have been surpassed.

Yours sincerely,

AFRAID SHE WOULD LOSE HER BOY.

He was wasting away with a terrible Cough. Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup cured the Cough and restored his health.

It takes the life out of a mother to see her child—the idol of her heart—slipping away, succumbing to a cruel Cough that all the remedies she has tried won't cure.

Mrs. Jasper Singer of Burgessville, Ont., went through a trying experience and gladly gives an account of it for the benefit of Canadian mothers. This is what she says: "My little boy of a year and four months old took down with a heavy cold last fall. I tried different medicines but they did no good. He got so thin he was nothing but bones and hardly ate anything.

"I thought quite a few times I would lose him, till I tried Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. The first bottle helped him wonderfully and the third bottle completed the cure.

"I would advise all mothers to give their little ones Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup as it is so pleasant to take and so effectual." Price 25c. All dealers.

CHAPTER XXIII.

JOHN JACOB AUSTIN.

The rattling old stage coach, or "hack," as the benighted ones called the doleful-looking vehicle that lumbered through the little inland village of Fairlie, four times a week, bringing passengers from the nearest railway, five miles distant, drew up before the only hotel the hamlet boasted, and deposited a single passenger, who stood staring vacantly about him for a few seconds, then, clutching his carpet bag tightly, hurried into the shabby little hotel.

"Here's another," exclaimed a languid-looking fat man, who proved to be a combination of porter, clerk, and proprietor, all in one. "Business is gettin' lively."

As the new-comer entered, however, he could see nothing to indicate the growing liveliness of which the languid landlord seemed almost inclined to complain. There was nothing particularly "lively" in the landlord, the hotel, or the village.

Fairlie had a "front" and a "back" street, and evidently boasted an aristocracy; for the front street was occupied by neat and pretty cottages, and some, a very few, houses pretentious enough to be called dwellings; while the back street—well, that was not much to speak of. There were two or three prim churches, and a neat new school-house. Fairlie was certainly a pretty village; a good place to come to if one wanted to take a nap. The villagers went away in the dismal old stage coach sometimes, and always hurried back, as if escaping from untold dangers. Sometimes, too, in the lazy summer, some one came to visit a relative—but what could bring strangers to this sleeping village was a question to arouse wonder, even in the sluggish mind of the fat landlord.

The latest arrival was a plainly-dressed, inoffensive-looking young man, who bore a general resemblance to Neil Bathurst, except that the face looked as stolid as a potato, the eyes had a most sheepish expression, the skin was somewhat browned and freckled, the hands ditto, the moustache was the scraggiest of its kind, and the hair, plastered low upon the forehead and "pomatumed" there, looked as if a rise in lard might soon be expected.

"Just put yer name down there," said the landlord, shoving toward the new-comer a greasy ledger and a time-worn pen.

The young man examined the ledger with much interest, and then pushed up his cuff, took the pen in an awkward manner, and, with as many grimaces and as much apparent effort as a boy would use in making his first pot-hooks, inscribed therein in great sprawling letters, the name, John Jacob Austin. This done, he laid down the pen, with a sigh, and looked about him, as if wondering what he should do next.

"Stranger in these parts, ain't you?" queried the landlord.

"Yes—rather," drawled John Jacob Austin.

"Goin' to stay long?"

"We—ll—middlin'"

"Aain't any related to Dr. Austin, be ye?"

"N—not that I—know of."

"Come on business?"

"Y—es—rather."

"Ain't a runner, air ye?"

"No," replied the stranger, slowly. "I'm lookin' around; maybe I'll buy a bit of land."

At this moment a shrill voice from kitchenward called loudly for "father," and the landlord hurried away, looking somewhat apprehensive.

When he was gone, John Jacob Austin opened the book again, and ran his eye over the registered names. Then he gave a low whistle. Just over the leaf was the name, J. B. Brady, and the date of the registry was in August last, while on the new page the entries ran thus:—

"J. B. Brady."

"Hiram Sprague, State census-taker."

"John Jacob Austin."

"State census-taker," mused Mr. Austin. "I should like to see a real live census-taker." Then he closed the ledger, went languidly out upon the low, smoke-stained veranda, and looked languidly up and down the street. The afternoon sun was sinking, and things looked as if the inhabitants had already retired for the night. He could stand there and see all there was of the business of the village. Looking up and down, his eye fell upon a time-worn sign suspended between two windows, over a grocery almost opposite. Without a moment's hesitation he crossed the street, ran up the stairs, and tapped at the door of the room before which swung the sign. The door was opened by a pleasant-faced, elderly man, who greeted the visitor with a stare of surprise, and then politely bade him enter. The visitor drew back, seeming to hesitate for a moment, and then entered the office, holding his hat awkwardly between his two hands, and seemingly much embarrassed.

"Beg your pardon, sir," he began, hesitatingly; "but is this Dr. Austin's office?"

"Yes, sir," replied the pleasant-faced man, "and I am Dr. Austin. Pray sit down."

The young man took a chair, and sat fumbling with his hat in a nervous way, while the dialogue continued.

"I hope I don't intrude," he said; "but I have just come in on the omnibus, and I looked over and saw your sign, and then came right along. My name's John Jacob Austin," and he drew from his pocket a blue card, on which the name was engraved in gilt letters, and presented it to the doctor.

"You see, sir," he hurried on, "I am a stranger hereabouts, and your name looked home-like; besides, I want to ask you a question. Did you ever have a brother named Jacob Austin?"

"No," answered Dr. Austin, looking gravely interested; "I never did."

"And you didn't never run away from home to study medicine, and never let anybody hear from you after that?" asked John Jacob, dolefully.

"No," laughed the man of medicine; "I never did."

"Then I am mistaken," said the young man, heaving a deep sigh. "You see, sir, I've lost all my relatives. I never had any brothers and sisters, and my father never had any, only his brother Ezra. My grandfather lived in York State, and was bound to make farmers out of the two. Well, Ezra wanted to be a doctor, and he and grandfather fell out. Pretty soon Ezra ran away, and my father never heard of him any more. Father stayed along on the farm, and when he died it came to me. Pretty soon I sold out, for they had all gone, and I wanted to come west. I had always had a sort of longing to study medicine myself, and my father always used to say, 'Wait till we find your Uncle Ezra; if he has made a doctor of himself, he may take you in hand.' You see I have been looking around some for a place to settle, and I came here to look at land. When I looked over and saw your sign my heart jumped almost into my mouth. 'What if that should be my uncle?' I thought to myself; 'I would just give up the farming business, and go in for being a doctor too.' Then I ran right over. I'm a lonesome sort of a chap you see, doctor," said John Jacob, rising slowly, "and I really do fell disappointed."

The face of the good doctor presented a picture of sympathy.

"I am sorry that I have been the means of disappointing you," he said kindly. "Don't go, Mr. Austin; perhaps I can be of some service to you, even if you are not my nephew."

As John Jacob Austin crossed the street, and again entered the little hotel, he looked a shade more cheerful than when he had presented himself at the office of Dr. Austin. He was not thinking of the good doctor, however; his thoughts ran about in this wise:—

"That J. B. Brady is unmistakable, and what can he be doing here? If he is here, where is Jocelyn? This goes a little beyond my expectations. Let's see what the supper table will develop."

The supper table was in full operation when he entered the dining-room, and sat demurely down without even glancing at his fellow boarders. That they were very few he could tell without looking. He ate somewhat awkwardly, and said "thank you" to the girl who served him, whenever the shadow of an opportunity offered itself. After some time he lifted his eyes from his plate, and looked sheepishly about him. There were two or three men who looked like mechanics, one with hair as well greased as John Jacob's own, who was evidently a clerk, one pretentious-looking individual who proved to be a farrier, and next him sat Mr. Jason Bradwardine. Next him sat a clerical-looking chap, who shot a mirthful glance straight into the stolid eyes of John Jacob, and last—was John Jacob himself.

The farrier and the clerical-looking man kept up a brisk conversation, during which it came out that the latter was none other than Hiram Sprague, the census taker.

After supper the boarders, with the exception of the gentleman registered as J. B. Brady, lounged about and smoked, and talked; and John Jacob, feeling more at ease, brightened up a little. The census taker strolled out, and presently strolled in again, and soon became the life of the group of loungers. He was not such a solemn man as he looked, after all, and in a few minutes they were all roaring at his jokes, John Jacob with the rest. After a little, however, John Jacob arose and walked toward the door.

"Take a cigar, young man?" asked the affable census taker, holding one toward him.

"No, thanky; I don't smoke. In—in fact—tobacco smoke makes me a little sick sometimes. I—I believe I'll just walk about a bit."

"It is pretty close here, that's a fact. Do you object to smoke outdoor, young fellow? If you don't, why I will take a turn with you."

"Oh, no, I don't mind it outside," replied the young man, as he twirled the door handle.

"Well, then, come along."

So saying the census taker lighted his cigar, clapped on his hat, and followed, or rather drove, John Jacob out of the room. They walked on without speaking, until they had passed the places of business and were walking along past the quiet cottages, then the census taker drew a little nearer his companion, and asked, in a low voice:—

"Neil, my boy, what the mischief are you doing away down here?"

"I didn't shadow you, old man. I was struck all of a heap, as they say, when I saw Brady's name on that dirty old register," replied the disguised, or rather, disfigured Bathurst.

"So you didn't follow Brad—and me? Then perhaps I had better not ask your business."

"Old man, I got you out of that old hive to tell it to you, and I have got to have your help, even if you have to shake the Bradwardine for a time," replied Neil Bathurst, gravely.

"Good Lord, Neil! is it a heavy case, then?"

"Yes, Rob. It's as bad as your Elise Schwartz business."

"What! it is murder?"

"Yes. It's murder."

"Who is the victim?"

"Clarence Arteveldt."

"What!"

"Clarence Arteveldt. He was murdered on his wedding night."

"Good God!"

They had passed beyond the row of cottages, and were now walking by a fenced-in, but vacant lot. As he uttered this last exclamation, Rob Jocelyn, for the census-taker was none other, passed and leaned back against the fence.

"Let's stop here," he said, after a moment's silence. "We can talk with more safety than when moving. Do you expect to find the assassin here, Neil?"

"No. I am after threads. Arteveldt's destroyer is believed to be a woman."

"A woman! What woman?"

"His wife."

"Heavens! Tell me all about it, Neil. I can't comprehend the thing."

"Well, Rob," began Neil Bathurst, leaning nearer to his friend, "the morning after the shadowing at Mike's, you remember my telling you that you had spoiled a wedding for me, don't you?"

"Yes! yes!"

"Well, it was Arteveldt's wedding, as I told you then, and it had a tragic termination. You had not been gone ten minutes when someone rapped at my door. I opened it, and Mrs. Arteveldt's coachman staggered in, looking like a ghost. He was too near crazy with fright to be very lucid, but I managed to make out that there had been murder committed at the new house Arteveldt had fitted up, and I set off at full speed. Arrived there, I went straight to the bridal chamber. The doctor was there already, and old Mrs. Arteveldt in hysterics of the worst sort, while on the bed, all covered up with the satin quilts and finery, lay Clarence, just as if he were sleeping, except that his face was livid, and there was a small, round hole just back of his temple, with only a clot of blood to mark it."

"What?"

Rob Jocelyn turned swiftly, and clutched his friend by the shoulders.

"What, Neil!" he cried, "a stylet wound?"

"Yes."

"Then, by the Lord, Neil Bathurst, you are hunting slippery game. Old Schwartz and his sister were killed in just that way, and I believe, when you find your murderess, I shall find mine."

"You think them to be the same?"

"Yes. Women who use such weapons are not plentiful. Trust me, the hand that struck down old Schwartz in London, and the hand that took the life of young Arteveldt, in America, belong to the same woman, and it will take all your wits, and all of mine, to find her, if she has escaped."

"She has escaped, as mysteriously and effectually as did Elise Schwartz, the London murderess."

"Then, I say again, she is Elise Schwartz."

(To be continued.)

OUR BEARDED LADY.

Designing men, through alluring and cunningly worded advertisements, constantly endeavor to work upon the feelings of sick and ailing women by inviting them "to write to a woman" (!) and secure a woman's sympathy." It is well to remember that the best sympathy is to had at home and not from strangers, perhaps hundreds of miles distant. The object of the sick is to get well, and however precious sympathy may be, it never yet cured a seriously afflicted woman. While the sympathy of your milliner or dressmaker might be appreciated and be just as beneficial, if not more so, than sympathy from a stranger, yet it can not effect your cure if you are an ailing woman.

It is loudly proclaimed through the press that "a woman can best understand a woman's ailments," and on this ground sick women are invited to "write to a woman" and get the benefit of a woman's advice. The sort of "understanding of her ailments" wanted by a sick woman is a trained medical understanding. If a woman has this trained medical knowledge she understands woman's ailments not as a woman, but as a physician. If she is not a doctor she cannot understand the ailments at all, and cannot treat them successfully, because she lacks the necessary training.

As far as known, there is no regularly qualified woman physician connected with any proprietary medicine especially designed for women—so one, therefore qualified by learning and experience, to advise on questions of disease and its cure.

It is certain that there is no one, man or woman, connected with any "put-up" medicine for women, excepting only Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, who, like Dr. Pierce, is a regular graduated and qualified physician, and who has, like him, devoted more than thirty years to the special study and treatment of diseases of women.

For more than thirty years Dr. R. V. Pierce, a regularly graduated doctor, has been chief consulting physician of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, of Buffalo, N. Y. On his staff are nearly a score of regularly graduated, experienced, skilled physicians, each of whom is a specialist in his chosen class of diseases. Every letter addressed to Dr. Pierce as above has prompt, conscientious attention, is regarded as sacredly confidential and is answered in a plain envelope so your private affairs are kept safe from prying eyes.

ST. JOHN'S SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The Children's Annual Entertainment Held Last Evening in the School Rooms.

The annual Sunday School Christmas entertainment of St. John's church was held last evening and proved to be one of the best children's entertainments ever held in the town. All the scholars were present and occupied the front of the hall, whilst a good audience of their friends were gathered in the rear.

The Mother Goose entertainment was most clever and original and was entirely composed and carried out by the talented young Peterborough artist, Miss Alma McCollum. It included waxworks and other representations based on the old nursery rhymes.

Another gift was placed on the tree for Mr. J. THE ROYAL ACADEMY

FACTS ABOUT ENGLAND'S GREAT AND WEALTHY SOCIETY.

How the Members and Associates Are Elected—The Institution's Big Fund and the Good Works That Are Done With It.

To become a Royal academician, or at all events an associate, is the ambition of every young artist, for membership in the academy means much more than the mere right to put the letters R. A. after one's name and to exhibit pictures in the fine galleries at Burlington House. In the first place, an academician is an esquire by right and not merely by courtesy, and, farther, he is entitled, should he ever come on hard times, to a substantial pension of between £350 and £400 a year. If he dies leaving his widow unprovided for, the academy allows her a liberal sum for her maintenance.

The associates and the associates' widows are also entitled to pensions on a somewhat smaller scale, so that there are many reasons apart from the honor and glory why the painter, sculptor or architect should wish to become a member of the powerful and wealthy body.

When therefore a young artist begins to get on, when he has his pictures well hung year after year, when they find ready buyers and are talked about in society, he takes the first step toward election by suggesting to one of the academicians that he should put his name down on the list of candidates. Once down his name stays on the list, either until he dies or is elected or voluntarily removes it, and this explains why one finds on the roll of candidates the names of many artists once popular, but long since forgotten by the public.

When a vacancy occurs among the associates, printed copies of this list on blue foolscap paper are sent to all the members, together with a request that they shall attend at the academy on a certain evening, when an election will take place. The elections themselves are conducted in a singular and somewhat complex fashion peculiar to the academy—a method which took the place about 20 years ago of the rough and ready system formerly in vogue.

Both academicians and associates are allowed to take part in the election, and when the members are gathered together each scores out with a pencil the name of the artist for whom he wishes to vote and hands the paper so marked to the secretary. These scorings out are known as "scratches" at the academy, and the secretary, after examining all the papers, duly announces how many "scratches" have been given to each candidate.

The election is then advanced another stage. The president, who, by virtue of his office, occupies the chair, directs that the names of all those candidates who have received more than four "scratches" shall be inscribed in chalk upon the blackboard, while those to whom only one, two or three votes have been given have no further chance of being elected.

The academicians and associates then vote again for the candidates whose names are on the board. The two leading men in this contest are now selected for a final ballot, the winner in which becomes an associate of the Royal academy.

The academicians are elected in precisely the same manner, except that the associates are the candidates instead of the outsiders. All this system of "scratches" and "blackboards" seems cumbrous and unnecessary, but it is said to work extremely well in practice.

Sometimes, though very rarely, a tie occurs, and in this case the president, or, in his absence, the academician who temporarily takes his place, has a casting vote. When Mr. Ernest Crofts, the battle painter, was elected, he tied in the final ballot with Mr. Jackson, the architect, and to Mr. Calderon (who in the absence of the late Sir John Millais occupied the chair) fell the difficult task of making the final selection.

The associates have no voice in the election of a president, the power of voting resting entirely with the academicians. Sir John Millais, the late president, was elected by the unanimous vote of the members, a fact which must have been extremely gratifying to that great artist. But on some other occasions the fight for the presidentship has been very severe indeed.

The post is well worth a struggle, for it carries with it substantial remuneration, besides great social and artistic distinction. The late Sir Francis Chantrey left £100,000 to the academy, out of the interest of which a salary of some £800 or £900 a year is provided for the president.

The academy is immensely wealthy. The receipts from the annual exhibitions average from £20,000 to £25,000, and it is believed that the money invested in the hands of the trustees does not fall far short of £500,000. Out of this money the schools (in which 200 or 300 students are instructed gratuitously) are supported and a great many pensions and donations to decayed artists are given. Little is heard of these charities by the public, but they are very considerable, and the declining years of many old painters and sculptors are made easier by them.

Upon the academy also falls the expense of the annual banquet, which costs perhaps £400 or £500, besides any number of minor charges, as, for example, the payment of the selecting and hanging committees at the spring exhibition.—Pearson's Weekly.

Not the greatest weight for that is not the proper way to estimate its value, it is the strength and flavor that determine it. What is called tea can be bought for a few cents per pound and yet it is expensive.

Ram Lal's Pure Indian Tea

has never been known as a "cheap" tea, yet it is economical because of its purity, flavor, and great strength. It will brew nearly double the number of good cups of tea that any other brand will. Cheap bulk teas not only lose their strength but the fine flavor is altogether wanting.

A CHANGE OF RULERS.

The New Viceroy of India Installed in His Office.

GREAT BRITAIN AND PEACE.

Lord Salisbury's Cordial Answer to The Czar's Disarmament Proposal—The French Shore Situation Likewise Encouraging—Madagascar Blue Book Report, However, Not so Palatable—Cable News.

Calcutta, Jan. 7.—Lord Curzon of Kedleston formally assumed the viceroyalty of India yesterday. A large gathering at Government House witnessed the ceremony.

At 9.30 a.m. the new Viceroy, preceded by his aides-de-camp, arrived at Government House and proceeded to the throne room, where he shook hands with the Earl of Elgin, the retiring Viceroy, with the latter's family, with the aides-de-camp, the members of the council and with the Lieut.-Governor and others.

General Sir William Lockhart, the Commander-in-Chief of the British forces in India, then formed Lord Curzon's procession and the whole party proceeded to the council room, where the impressive royal warrant appointing Baron Curzon of Kedleston Viceroy of India was read.

LORD AND LADY CURZON

The ceremony, though formal, was most striking, the brilliant uniforms of the officials and the foreign consuls lending much color to the scene.

A royal salute was fired, and the National Anthem was played. Directly after the warrant had been read, the Earl of Elgin and Lady Elgin and their immediate party left Government House.

Lord Curzon accompanied the Earl of Elgin to the river side and then returned to Government House, escorted by a full body guard of the Calcutta Light Horse.

The route was lined by troops, another royal salute was fired and the squadron of vessels in the Hooghly displayed all their bunting.

The Earl of Elgin embarked on board a launch, which took him to the steamer Clive, at Diamond Harbor, on his way to England.

GREAT BRITAIN AND PEACE.

The Premier's Cordial Answer Promising Co-operation in The Czar's Disarmament Proposal.

London, Jan. 7.—The reply of Lord Salisbury to the proposal of Emperor Nicholas for a disarmament conference of the powers, which is just published, promises the cordial co-operation of the British Government, and asks for an indication of the heads of discussion at the conference.

In the course of the document, which was transmitted through the Rt. Hon. Sir Charles Stewart Scott, British ambassador at St. Petersburg, Lord Salisbury assures the Czar of the Government's cordial sympathy. He goes on to say: "This sympathy is not confined to the Government, but is equally shared by popular opinion, which has been strikingly manifest by the numerous resolutions adopted by public meetings and societies. There are, indeed, few nations, if any, which, both on the grounds of feeling and interest, are more concerned in the maintenance of general peace than Great Britain. The statements which constituted the grounds of the Emperor's proposal are but too well justified. It is unfortunately true, that, while a desire for the maintenance of peace is generally professed, and while, in fact, serious and successful efforts on more than one recent occasion have been made with that object by the great powers, there has been a constant tendency on the part of almost every nation to increase its armed force, and add to the already vast expenditure on the appliances of war.

"The perfection of the instruments thus brought into use, their extreme costliness and the horrible carnage and destruction which would ensue from their employment on a large scale, have acted no doubt as a serious deterrent from war, but the burdens imposed by this process, on the populations affected, must, if prolonged, produce a feeling of unrest and discontent, menacing to both internal and external tranquility."

Lord Salisbury says: "Her Majesty's Government will gladly co-operate with the proposed effort to provide a remedy for the evils and, if in any degree it succeeds, they feel that the sovereign to whose suggestion it is due will have richly earned the gratitude of the world at large."

Lord Salisbury then promises that a delegate and representative will take part in the proposed conference whenever the invitation is received, and expresses the hope that the invitation may be accompanied by some indication of the special points to which the attention of the conference is to be directed, as a guide in the selection of the British representative and his assistants.

ENGLAND AND FRANCE WILL AGREE

Prospect of an Amicable Settlement of Newfoundland Matters.

Paris, Jan. 7.—From well-informed quarters here it is regarded as probable that France and Great Britain will reach an agreement on the Newfoundland shore question which will be satisfactory to Great Britain.

The French Shore Question.

St. John's, Nfld., Jan. 7.—General satisfaction is expressed by the colonial press at French utterances indicating a willingness to settle the French shore question for a monetary compensation. When the report of the British royal commission is published, it will show that the French fishery operations on the west shore of Newfoundland are extremely trifling, while the St. Pierre archipelago owes its prosperity mainly to the smuggling traffic, of which it is the headquarters.

The colonial newspapers anticipate that an adjustment of the difficulty will be accomplished within a year, France's dread of a repetition of the Fashoda backdown being likely to prevent her from putting forward unreasonable demands.

GORDON MEMORIAL COLLEGE.

Lord Cromer Lays the Foundation Stone at Khartoum.

Cairo, Jan. 7.—The British diplomatic agent in Egypt, Viscount Cromer, laid the foundation stone at Khartoum yesterday of the Gordon memorial college, in the name of Queen Victoria and in the presence of the Sirdar, General Lord Kitchener of Khartoum, the British officers and the native Sheikhs.

The British agent in a speech outlined the aims of the college, announced that it would be wholly undenominational and that the instruction, so far as possible, would be conducted in the Arabic language. He added that the object of the college was not to create a race of Anglicised Soudanese, but to train their minds.

The speech, which was translated into Arabic, was well received by the native audience. The ceremony concluded with "God Save the Queen."

The British in Egypt.

Cairo, Jan. 7.—Further significant evidence of the revolution that is going on in native opinion is furnished by the publication in The Mokattam, which consistently supports the British Administration, of communications from a number of influential persons who were formerly violent anglophobes, praising British policy.

Spanish Queen's 12th Day.

London, Jan. 7.—The Madrid correspondent of The Standard says: "In accordance with the usual custom on 12th Day, the Queen Regent and King Alfonso held yesterday an exclusively military levee, which was attended by all the marshals except Martinez de Campos, who is indisposed. Over 1,000 officers passed before Their Majesties, the most observed in the throne room being General Weyler and General Polavieja. There were also many prominent commanders from the colonies."

Bombay Natives Grew Sceptic.

Moscow, Russia, Jan. 7.—Dr. Haffkin, a Russian doctor at Bombay, has telegraphed the Imperial medical department that he has persuaded 5,000 natives of the Indian city to undergo inoculation with the attenuated virus of cholera. Dr. Haffkin says he is assured by the high authorities of the native cults that no religious objections will stand in the way of the experiment.

Abandonment Was Justifiable.

London, Jan. 7.—The Board of Trade enquiry into the loss of the British freight steamer Westmeath, Capt. Johnson, which was abandoned at sea on Nov. 6 last, after leaving Hamburg on Oct. 23 for Montreal, has found that the ship, whose shaft was broken, was not permaturely abandoned, and that her commander was justified in sinking her, in view of the danger to passing vessels. Neither the captain nor any of the officers were blameable.

Boiler Explodes Under a Test.

London, Jan. 7.—A big boiler, while being tested in Hewitt's ship building yard at Barking, a town about seven miles from here, burst yesterday and the superintending engineer and eight men were killed. About 40 persons were injured, some fatally. The bodies of the dead were frightfully mutilated. The whole shipbuilding works was wrecked. A lad was found dead 300 yards from the scene of the disaster. A number of men and boys are missing. The windows in houses half a mile away were shattered.

GUNBOATS TO ILOILO.

Sent by U.S. to Support the Baltimore Against Insurgents.

THE SITUATION IS MOST GRAVE.

The Filipinos are Unwilling to Surrender to "Strangers" as They Term the Americans—They Deny that There was any Cruelty to Prisoners or Looting—Good Government Established.

Manila, Jan. 7.—The United States gunboats Concord and Petrel have been sent from this port to Iloilo, to support the cruiser Baltimore in the operations against the native insurgents.

A correspondent at Iloilo, Philippine Islands, denies the reports that cruelty has been practised in the treatment of prisoners. It is further stated from Manila that the Filipinos are unwilling to surrender to "strangers." The Independencia, a native paper, says the situation is most grave, and that, unless the Americans abandon their annexation policy, there will be a bloody war.

What The Americans Found.

Hong Kong, Jan. 7.—The papers here publish a despatch from Iloilo, evidently from a Filipino source, which says that when the Americans arrived there they found there had been absolutely no looting. They found a good government established, which met with the approval of foreign residents.

Escaped from Aguinaldo.

San Francisco, Jan. 7.—Among the passengers on the steamship Doric, from Yokohama, which arrived here last night, were ten disguised Spanish priests of the St. Augustin order, refugees from the wrath of Aguinaldo, who had been hiding in Manila for several months, and are now on their way to Panama, expecting to find a new field of labor in Central America.

Release of Prisoners Delayed.

Madrid, Jan. 7.—Gen. Rios, the Spanish commander, telegraphs from Manila that the strained relations between the Americans and insurgents prevents steps being taken in favor of the release of Spanish prisoners in the Philippine Islands. He adds that he will act in that direction as soon as it is possible.

ESTERHAZY LOOKS HAGGARD.

The Author of the Dreyfus Bordereau Suffering From Loneliness.

London, Jan. 7.—The Daily News publishes this morning an interview a special correspondent in Holland has had with Major Comte Ferdinand Walsin Esterhazy, author of the Dreyfus bordereau. The correspondent says: "I found him in a small, typical Dutch hotel. His face betrayed the ravages of the anxiety of recent months, and he is terribly lonely. He told me he had hardly spoken to anyone since he left England. He declined to say anything about the enquiry now in progress before the Court of Cassation, but did indulge in a violent anti-Jewish tirade.

"Esterhazy declared that the Dreyfus affair is a bitter racial war, legitimate and natural, a defence against the most terrible invasion which ever menaced Europe, observing that unhappily the defenders were not agreed among themselves. He complained that while he was left in the most absolute tranquility during his stay in England, he had been continually threatened and insulted in Holland."

PRINCE VICTOR IS SILENT.

Keeps Away From Reporters Who Want Questions Answered.

Brussels, Jan. 7.—Attempts were made yesterday by newspaper correspondents to interview Prince Victor Napoleon regarding the statement made by The Paris Matin that a Bonapartist coup d'etat was being prepared. The Prince resolutely declined to be seen and his secretary declined to either affirm or deny the statement.

The secretary added, however, that the Prince had no desire to openly disavow the militant attitude ascribed to him, nor to avow it. The Belgian Government constantly expels obscure persons suspected of menacing the security of other countries with whom it maintains good relations and the Belgian Government might feel obliged to take measures to prevent the country from being made the scene of a plot against the French Government.

In Regard to Madagascar.

London, Jan. 7.—A blue book has just been issued containing the correspondence between Great Britain and France on the subject of trade restrictions in Madagascar.

All the morning papers comment upon the Madagascar blue book, asking how it is possible to live in amity with a country which tramples upon treaty rights and treats a friendly country in such a manner.

The Times says: "It is a good thing for the world's peace that we are able to possess our soul in patience under the pin pricks of the French Government, which, under the cover of grandiloquent phrases, habitually acts with stupidity and the short-sighted cunning of the peasant.

Rioting in Sicily.

Rome, Jan. 7.—Despatches from Misceni, Sicily, say that rioting has been renewed there because of the attempt at over-taxation. A mob of several thousand people surrounded the municipal offices and smashed the windows, shouting: "Down with the municipality!" Thirteen stations at which taxes are collected have been drenched with kerosene and burned. The troops have not been able to control the mob. Two soldiers have been wounded. The Italian Government has called for reinforcements for the garrison.

It is an easy thing to be a millionaire in Berlin. A yearly income of over $9,000, representing the interest on 1,000,000 marks, is the qualification for that title, which is enjoyed by 2,002 Berliners.

Perfectly Cured

Weak and Low Spirited—Nervous Prostration—Appetite Poor and Could Not Rest.

"I take great pleasure in recommending Hood's Sarsaparilla to others. It has been the means of restoring my wife to good health. She was stricken down with an attack of nervous prostration. She suffered with headaches and her nerves were under severe strain. She became very low spirited and so weak she could only do a little work without resting. Her appetite was poor, and being so weak she could not get the proper rest at night. She decided to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, as we had heard it highly praised, and I am glad to state that Hood's Sarsaparilla has perfectly cured all her ailments." G. EDITORIAL NOTES.

As a further indication of our prosperity it may be mentioned that according to Dunn's Review the business failures in Canada were 28 per cent. less in 1898 than in 1897, or any of three preceding years. Besides, the liabilities were last year nine millions odd, as against fourteen millions and seventeen millions odd in 1897 and 1896 respectively.

BRITISH COLUMBIA is giving Uncle Sam a taste of his own medicine. At the opening of the Legislature, on Thursday, the speech from the throne contained an announcement that legislation would be introduced "to exclude aliens from taking up and working claims in the Province of British Columbia." This means, of course, the exclusion of Americans.

THE New York Commercial Advertiser notices that the traffic through the Sault Ste. Marie canals during the past season was larger than that of the Suez canal, and adds that "it is suggestive that the waterway which joins two sections of our country should be medium of a larger trade than that of a waterway which joins two continents." Here is where the Trent Valley Canal can, in the language of the small boy, "get in its work." We should not rest till it completed.

THE opinion of Mr. Fawcett, late gold commissioner of the Yukon, regarding the richness of that region, is as follows:—"I have greater faith in the wealth of the Yukon to-day than I had a year ago. I believe the gold deposit here to be more extensive than any of us first imagined, and that we are only at the beginning of the riches. From present indications, and even at this early stage in the season's work, I believe that the washup next spring will yield at least twice as much as that of this year. If these rich finds continue it will be much beyond that."

SIR WILFRID LAURIER'S proposal to reform the Senate, in operation at least, by the proposal of a joint vote, is being subjected to considerable hostile criticism, but it is not probable that that any scheme for reforming the senate will be unobjectionable to all concerned. Next to an elective senate—the making of it responsible to the people, his proposal is the most practical one that has yet been put forward. In that event the course of the Senate upon public questions would be a matter of public discussions; as its course now is merely a subject of public execration, for constituted as it is, it cannot be expected to act impartially and in the interests of the public without reference to mere party interests.

WE can set the minds of some American journals at rest. Canada is not the least little bit frightened or concerned over the speech of General Wilson at Lacoun, down south, when he threatened us in the form of a hope that before the President's term was out the Yankee flag would fly over every foot of land from the pole to Mexico, that, of course, including Canada. Well Canada is quite content with the present flag that floats over her acres. Our Yankee neighbours once tried the job of planting their calico standard on Canadian soil, but it was a dead failure. Though under the most favourable conditions the United States would find it too big a job to plant its flag on Canadian soil, they will have their hands too full in keeping the Cubans and Filipinos in shape to tackle big game. No, we're not alarmed. General Wilson and other United Statesers may talk till they're black in the face, and it won't make one atom of difference to us.

THE CAMPAIGN AGAINST CONSUMPTION.

An Active Crusade Against the Dread Disease

The organized attack on consumption which has been set in motion in Britain by the Prince of Wales, bids fair to be productive of good results, and is a movement the importance of which is very great. The warfare against this terrible disease is being waged in every civilized country, and science ought, aided by united public effort, to bring about, if not the extinction of this terrible scourge of humanity, at least something near it. It is pointed out by the chemical expert that thus far, while we know of the deadly tubercle-bacillus, we have not been able successfully to set the germicide bounds upon the quarry in consequence of all the counter agents developing poison themselves before reaching such a degree of strength as will enable them to affect the bacillus. In time, doubtless, science will develop something that will do so. Meantime, the new Society for the Prevention of Consumption, lays stress on the absolute necessity of precaution, and has formulated and published in the press the following simple but weighty threefold warning. The hints given are worthy of world-wide consideration. The first is one which is of especial significance in a country like the United States, and to a far too great extent, our own, where the dangerous as well as dirty habit of promiscuous spitting prevails so extensively. The condition of the sidewalks, room or hall where men have congregated affords too conspicuous and unpleasant proof of this. The precautionary measures recommended by the new Society are as follows, and we recommend everyone to consider them carefully:

1. Inasmuch as the disease is spread by the blowing about of the dried expectoration of consumption in which the bacilli are present in enormous numbers, sufferers and their families are to be educated to see that their sputum is promptly destroyed by fire or sterilized. If this is done, there will be little need to isolate patients, as their breath does not contain bacilli nor does the air of their rooms, except through dried sputum, (spittle charged with substance from the air passages or lungs.)

2. As cattle are extremely subject to the disease, and especially dairy cows, to organize a rigid inspection of all dairies, milk and meat, to prevent the introduction of the germs into the body by these means.

3. To provide Sanatoria in which patients can be treated at a low or nominal cost immediately upon the recognition of the disease.

DEATH OF BISHOP SULLIVAN.

Rector of St. James' Cathedral, Toronto, Succumbs to an Affectation of the Heart—His Career.

Toronto, Jan. 7.—The Right Rev. Bishop Sullivan, D.D., rector of St. James' Cathedral, in this city, suffered a relapse on Thursday and died at 10 minutes after 5 o'clock yesterday morning. A few minutes before his death he seemed to have a premonition that his departure was at hand, for he called his family around him and bade them farewell.

Bishop Sullivan preached his last sermon at the morning service in St. James' Cathedral on Sunday, Dec. 11. He was then quite well. On the following Thursday afternoon he conducted his Bible class as usual at the church, and then showed signs of illness. Next day he was taken seriously ill with the complicated trouble from which he never recovered.

Dr. Sullivan was born in Lurgan, Ireland, on Aug. 18, 1822, and graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, 1857. He came to Canada and was ordained deacon by Bishop Cronyn of Huron in 1858. For three years he was curate to Archdeacon Brough, rector of St. George's, London Township. In 1861 he became curate to Bishop Bond, then rector of St. George's Church, Montreal. In 1863 he was called to be rector of Trinity Church, Chicago. Here the degree of doctor of theology was conferred upon him. In 1875 he returned to Montreal as rector of St. George's Church.

In 1882 Dr. Sullivan was elected Bishop of Algoma in succession to Dr. Fauquier. For 11 years Dr. Sullivan labored with great assiduity and devotion in the organization of that difficult diocese, and in the establishment of the various diocesan funds. But in 1893 the bishop's health gave way under the great strain of labor and anxiety, and his medical advisers ordered immediate and prolonged rest. After two winters spent in the south of France his health was in a measure restored, but not to such an extent as to make it possible for the bishop to continue to bear the burdens of the diocese. Consequently, in 1896, upon the election of Canon DuMoulin to the Diocese of Niagara, he accepted the rectory of St. James' Cathedral, Toronto.

Deceased was a D.C.L. of Lennoxville and Dublin, and a D.D. of Trinity University, Toronto. He was a member of the council of Trinity University.

Bishop Sullivan married in 1866 Frances Mary, second daughter of Edward Benaud of Neufchatel. She survives her husband, and two sons and two daughters mourn their loss. The interment will take place on Monday next.

DINGLEY IS DYING.

Representative from Maine Cannot Last Much Longer, the Doctor Says.

Washington, Jan. 7.—The condition of Representative Nelson Dingley of Maine, who has been ill with pneumonia for almost a week, has undergone a marked change for the worse and last night his physicians held out little if any hope for recovery. Although the lung has improved considerably and the cough lessened, the effect of the pneumonia has so weakened the system as to decrease the vitality to an alarming extent. The poison from the sickness has permeated the whole system, which renders it less potent to stand the terrible strain. Much of the day the patient was delirious and appeared to be uttering extracts from speeches he made on the tariff question in the House of Representatives. He was conscious only when aroused. The physicians say there must be a radical change one way or another very soon.

How Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Him of Rheumatism and Gout, After the Best Doctors and Many Medicines had Failed.

DRESDEN, Jan. 6.—This town boasts a peculiarity of which its people may well be proud, as it proves beyond dispute, that they possess that desirable attribute, common sense, in no small degree. That peculiarity is the remarkable decrease in the number of cases of Rheumatism during the past few years.

Eight years ago Dresden was afflicted by that curse of modern civilization, Rheumatism, to as great an extent as any other place of its size in the Dominion. To-day such a complaint is practically unknown here.

A clue to the means by which this desirable condition has been brought about may be found in the following statement, given for publication by W. G. Cragg, Esq., ex reeve of the town, and one of our most prominent merchants.

"For eight years I was a martyr to Rheumatism, of the inflammatory type, and during that period my sufferings beggared description. To add to my misery I was attacked by Gout. The best doctors failed to benefit me, and no good was done by the many patent medicines I used.

"At times I could not get about at all, and at the best, it was a severe task for me to make my way about my store.

"Hearing that Dodd's Kidney Pills had cured a Dresden lady of Rheumatism, I decided to try the medicine. Imagine my delighted surprise when I found myself growing better after having taken half a dozen doses. I used six boxes of the pills and am now as sound and as well as ever I was. Dodd's Kidney Pills cured me. This I am ready and willing to swear to."

Dodd's Kidney Pills are the surest, quickest and best cure for Rheumatism ever known. They never fail. And they cost only fifty cents a box at all drug stores.

Is Rostand a Plagiarist.?

Chicago, Jan. 7.—According to papers filed in the United States Circuit Court late yesterday afternoon, Edmund Rostand is a plagiarist. S. E. Gross, a millionaire real estate dealer of Chicago, and founder of the suburb of Grossdale, claims that he, and not Rostand, wrote the great play of "Cyrano de Bergerac," and he asks the court to enjoin Richard Mansfield, A. M. Palmer and all others who have produced the piece from further performing it. Gross says he wrote it 23 years ago.

That Havana Street Railway.

Cleveland, Jan. 7.—Word reached this city yesterday that the franchise of the Havana Street Railway Company had been secured by the Toronto Street Railway Company, in which Henry A. Everett of this city is interested.

"I am interested in the Toronto company as a stockholder only," said Everett. "I hear from Toronto to-day that the company has secured the Havana franchise, and is also operating the road."

SELFISHNESS.

We Nearly Always Discover It In Others but Never In Ourselves.

Probably the most insidious of all the faults is that upon the absence of which we most pride ourselves, and that at the same time we notice most readily in others. In some of us it is pride, in others gossiping. The list is long, and we know it without going into details, but that which we do not seem to realize is that the very most common fault of us all as a mass is selfishness.

We do know that nearly every one we meet is selfish, but we seldom discover how selfish we are ourselves unless shown by a sudden touch of deep regret. Most of us discover, for instance, that we were selfish in reference to some dear friend dead, but we stop right there, and while we regret the past and shed useless tears over the lost chance we do not make any new discoveries—namely, that we are selfish to our living friends—and while we think that they are being unfair, unkind, to us we forget to be generous ourselves, to look beyond the frown, the hard word, the selfish act or neglect, and see what it is that causes all this, to see what strain our friend is bearing and share it in so far as patience, generous forbearance, will lighten it.

Think how selfish most of us have been in time gone by, how quick words have gone out to hurt hearts already hurt, when from us at least that particular cross friend had a right to hope for better things.

Do not make a very close examination of things in general and see whether you are not yourself more selfish than are your friends, and remember that the greatest generosity in this world is to have patience with others in their "selfishness," for in half the cases at least it is pain or worry, not real intended unkindness at all.—Philadelphia Times.

A NEW INVENTION

The Newcombe Piano Has It.

It consists of a Patented Practice CLAVIER or STOP which diminishes the tone when required and saves wear on the Piano; it also does away with the old way of having to press down the pedal with the foot in order to soften the tone when running the scales or practicing. Oftentimes the young pupil on the piano cannot press down on the pedal without throwing themselves out of the proper position when they should sit erect. This invention in the NEWCOMBE PIANO will enable children to begin two years earlier on the piano. In addition to the above, the NEWCOMBE PIANO is the finest made in Canada. Children often complain about practicing; they like it if they have a NEWCOMBE PIANO. 1898 styles are gems of art, containing every late improvement; they possess that beautiful full sweet tone which delights the singer, and so pleases every musical ear. Organs of every description at Wholesale Prices.

Big Bargains now on hand in slightly used. Upright and Square Pianos of the various makes taken in part exchange for the famous NEWCOMBE PIANOS. Every NEWCOMBE PIANO has a new registered scale and the warranty is cast in the plate. CURED OF ITCHING PILES OF 23 YEARS STANDING

M. T. Wigle, better known to every one in the vicinity as "Uncle Mike," was troubled for over 23 years with itching piles. At times he was so bad he would have to quit work. The irritation became so intense with constant rubbing that they became ulcerated and would bleed. He had been treated by many physicians, but found nothing that gave him relief. Reading in the paper the cure of a friend who had suffered in a like manner, and been cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment, he procured a box. After the third application he got such relief that he had the first comfortable night's sleep he had enjoyed in years. The one box made a complete cure, and he says he would not be without it for $50 a box if it could not be replaced. Mr. Wigle is a wealthy farmer, well known in the community in which he resides. It is over two years since he was afflicted, and he has never been troubled since.

Physicians fail to make a cure when Dr. Chase's Ointment gave Immediate Relief. . . .

Wonderful Increase in the Revenue of the Dominion.

THE REDUCTION OF THE DEBT.

Financial Statement for the Last Half Year of 1898—Total Income to Dec. 31, was $23,113,573—Every Source of Revenue Excepting the Post-office Increased—Official Figures of the Plebiscite.

Ottawa, Jan. 7.—The financial statement for the first six months of the current fiscal year shows a betterment of revenue on consolidated fund account compared with the corresponding period of 1897 of $4,179,000. There was, however, an increased expenditure of $1,288,-000, which makes a net improvement of $2,846,000. The total income to December 31, 1898, was $23,113,573, and for the half year ending December 31, 1897, $17,963,974. Every source of revenue but the postoffice gives a substantial increase for the six months period, as well as for December. The showing of the Customs Department is $2,266,000 better than it was in 1897, and that of the Excise Department $1,445,000 better. The income for December, 1898, exceeded that for the corresponding month of 1897 by nearly half a million dollars; to be exact, $418,540, the totals being $3,701,437, as against $3,282,897.

The expenditure on consolidated fund account to December 31 was $14,811,927, as against $13,488,170 for the same period in 1897, an increase of $1,323,060. For the month of December the expenditure was $2,419,309, compared with $2,079,944 in December, 1897.

The expenditure on capital account, due to the canal works and Crow's Nest Railway, shows an increase of $2,852,-574, an investment which promises a handsome return to the people of Canada. There was paid out on capital account during the six months just closed $6,314,629, as against $3,362,355 in 1897. Of this expenditure public works, railways and canals took $2,630,216, and railway subsidies $2,264,716, as compared with $1,634,498 and $566,819 respectively in 1897. The capital expenditure for the month of December, 1898, was $615,171, as against $297,565 in December, 1897. On December 31, 1898, the public debt stood at $261,269,009, having been decreased during the month by $771,944.

The Prohibition Plebiscite.

A summary statement of the vote in the prohibition plebiscite will be officially published in The Canada Gazette today. The total affirmative majority was 107,943. After deducting the majority answers given in Quebec (94,039), the total majority of affirmative answers to the question in the whole Dominion is 13,916. Total number of voters on the electoral lists, 1,238,549, as reported by the returning officers. Total number of voters who voted on this question, 543,-958, and whose votes were accepted.

Senate Reform.

"In the case of Canada," said Sir John Bourinot, "a dissolution of the elected House of Commons, under grave circumstances, in a political crisis, would meet all conditions, and a joint sitting would then be wisely held to adjust the difficulty after the expression of the popular will. If the verdict was adverse to the Senate it must at once recede, but the objections to the Senate will hardly be removed while its members are the creation largely of a party long in power. Such a system as works admirably in the well-governed Kingdom of Denmark has its advantages, and that is a Senate partly elected, partly nominated. Universities, cities and legislatures might in Canada also have the choice of certain members of the Upper House. One thing is quite certain," added Sir John Bourinot, "an Upper House is an absolute necessity in this Dominion to ensure safe legislation, and interpose a barrier against rash government, and any change in the constitution of the Senate should be in the direction of making it more representative and in closest possible touch with the sentiment of the conservative and thoughtful classes in this country, where the influences of democracy are on the increase."

OUR JAWS NEED EXERCISE.

Lack of Mastication Causes Dyspepsia and Tooth Troubles.

Mastication is rapidly becoming a lost art, and, although we have become hardened to the fact that three-fourths of the dyspepsia is due to this cause, it might surprise some of us to know that the early decay of the teeth and diseases of the gums are occasioned by this same lack of maxillary exercise.

A disease of the gums, called Rigg's disease, which is every day becoming more common, is caused almost entirely by the want of proper mastication. Twenty-five years ago this trouble was not considered of any importance by the dentist on account of its rare occurrence.

Today it is given more care than the decay of the teeth, as he is frequently consulted by patients who have a full set of natural teeth which are quite loose in the jaw. Aside from this they are sound and healthy, and after a certain development in the disease nothing can be done to help them.

By lack of exercise the blood which should nourish both the bones and the gums is not carried to the part, nor does the blood carry sufficient material to the teeth; hence the enamel formed is defective, and early decay results. Frequently, too, the mechanical development of the jaw is arrested by this same want of motion.

Most of the food among the better class of people today is cooked so as to require very little mastication, and the consequence is that the muscles have become flabby, the jaws slender and the processes for the attachment of the muscles almost, obliterated.—Boston Globe.

Mr. J. M. Donovan Tells how Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Him.

Peterborough, Dec. 26.—This town is famed throughout the Dominion as the most go ahead, progressive, wealthy and up-to-date on the continent. This reputation is thoroughly deserved, and was earned by the quickness of the residents to see and to take advantage of a "good thing" when it comes our way.

One especially good thing that our people have benefitted by is the taking of kidney cures—Dodd's Kidney Pills—a household remedy in Peterborough.

Among those cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills is Mr. J. M. Donovan, who reports that this remedy cured him completely of Urinary troubles, indicating the first stage of Diabetes.

Dodd's Kidney Pills are the only remedy that has ever been known to cure this disease. They never fail.

A HERO'S AWFUL DEATH.

A Sack of Dynamite Explodes in Mr McGourty's Arms—Caught Fire from His Pipe.

St. John, N.B., Jan. 7.—Mr. Cornelius McGourty, the well known contractor, was killed yesterday morning under sad circumstances by a dynamite explosion near the Mispec pulp mills. Mr. McGourty was engaged in laying water and steam pipes, and used the dynamite for blasting. Over 50 sticks were in a sack hanging over the boiler in a temporary shed, getting thawed out. Seven or eight persons were present. One of the party took the sack and handed it to McGourty, who familiarly laid it down on the ground while he lit a match and applied it to a pipe in his mouth. Suddenly the bag was seen to be on fire. McGourty called out to the others to run for their lives, and instantly the workmen made a dash. Only a few steps away was the Mispec stream, and Mr. McGourty determined on a heroic effort to avert the explosion. Picking up the bag of dynamite, he started for the stream. He only reached the door when there was a terrific explosion. The shed was destroyed, and Mr. McGourty was literally blown to pieces. His arms were gone, and his breast torn away. The fleeing workmen were thrown several feet by the explosion but they escaped injury. It is supposed the bag caught fire from a spark from Mr. McGourty's pipe. The deceased was 50 years old, and leaves four children.

Mr. Underwood a Lucky Man.

Montreal, Jan. 7.—President Loury and General Manager Underwood of the "Soo" line, will arrive here to-day or Sunday, and as the C.P.R. board of directors meet on Monday, it is quite probable that Mr Underwood's resignation will be discussed, and perhaps his successor appointed.

As a matter of fact, the general manager's resignation has not yet been received here, but he probably brings it in his pocket.

The story is that the Baltimore & Ohio offered to double Mr. Underwood's salary, which was $10,000, and to give him the handsome bonus of $100,000.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

East Buffalo, Jan. 6.—Cattle—There were no sale offerings, and with a moderate enquiry for handy butchers' cattle, the feeling was steady to firm. The supply of calves was a little better to-day, but there was a good demand for choice veals at a quarter better prices. Choice to extra were quotable $7.50 to $8; good to choice, $7 to $7.50.

Sheep and Lambs—The offerings were about 21 loads. The demand for desirable grades of sheep and lambs was active, and prices higher. Choice to extra were quotable $5.25 to $5.40; good to choice, $5 to $5.25; common to good, $4.75 to $5. Sheep, choice to extra, $3.75 to $4; common to fair, $2.50 to $3.50. There was a pretty good clearance.

OUR DAUGHTERS ARE IN DANGER.

Signs by Which the Danger May be Detected.

Paleness, Weakness, Nervous Headache and other Symptoms of Dyspepsia—Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets are the Only Positive and Reliable Cure.

Is your daughter a pale-faced nervous girl?

If she is, then she is weak of body, short of breath, easily tired, has cold feet, suffers greatly with nervous headache, also with ringing noises in her ears, has variable appetite, cannot sleep well, and is troubled with "nightmare."

Do you know what is the matter with her?

You have been told, very likely that she is "going into decline," or that she is in the first stage of "consumption."

Perhaps she has taken medicine under the impression created by these assertions. If so, it has done her no good.

Her trouble is by no means so terrible nor so mysterious. She has dyspepsia. That is all. And that is enough.

What she needs is a short treatment with Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets. They will restore her to health—perfect and complete—in remarkably short time.

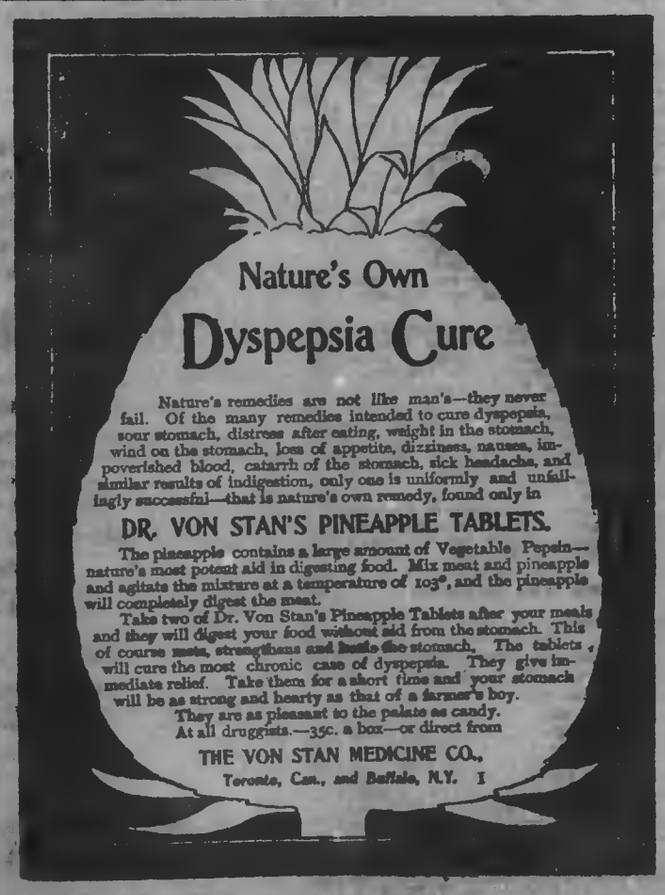
Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets digest the food that the weak, exhausted stomach cannot digest. This food is then converted into rich, nourishing, vitalizing blood, which goes to feed and nourish the entire body.

Weakness and illness depart, to be replaced by strength and health.

Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets have saved many lives. They are saving life daily.

Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets are the only positive cure for Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Heartburn, Anaemia, or Poverty of the Blood, Waterbrash, Sour Stomach, Flatulence, Liver Complaint, and all other Stomach Troubles.

Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold by all druggists, at fifty cents a box; six boxes $2.50, or sent, on receipt of price, by The Dodds Medicine Co., Limited, Toronto.



Nature's Own
Dyspepsia Cure
Nature's remedies are not like man's—they never fail. Of the many remedies intended to cure dyspepsia, sour stomach, distress after eating, weight in the stomach, wind on the stomach, loss of appetite, dizziness, nausea, impoverished blood, catarrh of the stomach, sick headache, and similar results of indigestion, only one is uniformly and unfailingly successful—that is nature's own remedy, found only in
DR. VON STAN'S PINEAPPLE TABLETS.
The pineapple contains a large amount of Vegetable Pepsin—nature's most potent aid in digesting food. Mix meat and pineapple and agitate the mixture at a temperature of 103°, and the pineapple will completely digest the meat.
Take two of Dr. Von Stan's Pineapple Tablets after your meals and they will digest your food without aid from the stomach. This of course rests, strengthens and heals the stomach. The tablets will cure the most chronic case of dyspepsia. They give immediate relief. Take them for a short time and your stomach will be as strong and hearty as that of a farmer's boy.
They are as pleasant to the palate as candy.

COLTS WIN AT HOCKEY.

They Put the Lakefields Out of Business Last Night by 14 Goals to 5.

The Peterborough III or Colts team, as it is more familiarly known, journeyed to Lakefield last night to play their first scheduled O.H.A. match of the season. As the Lakefield team is considerably heavier and older than the Colts, it was thought that the latter would need all their skill to dispose of their opponents, and therefore it was somewhat of a surprise when the ultimate score was announced.

The Colts team was composed of: Goal, Willis McDonnell; point, Eddie Graham; cover point, Harold Armstrong, capt.; forwards, Harry King, Stanley Bradd, Harry Morgan, Hubert McBain. Mr. E. Percy Brown, of Toronto, made, as usual, a most satisfactory and efficient referee.

There was a large and very enthusiastic crowd at the rink which cheered mightily when Lakefield scored the first goal. The Colts, however, got the next three. Then Lakefield took another and before the half was over the Colts raised the score to 5—2 in their favour.

In the second half Lakefield tallied first, and with the score standing 5—3 their supporters began to look on the bright side of things. Their hopes, however, were dampened when the Colts quickly tallied six games in succession. Lakefield then took 2, but Peterborough followed with 3 more, leaving the score standing 14—5 at the end of the game.

Harold Armstrong, at cover, played his usual strong game.

HATS OFF TO THE COLTS.

No finer combination was ever seen on any ice than that worked by Harry King and Bradd last night. King not only plays a great game, but his presence on the ice does much to steady the Colts' forward line. Bradd put up a wonderful game last night. His following up and all round dashing play surprised everybody. Eddie Graham played a superb game at point. He is putting up gilt edge hockey this winter. He, Armstrong and McDonnell form a defence probably unequal in the junior O. H. A. series. McBain played a strong game at cover centre. He broke up many a rush and in the second half played the game of his life. Morgan was closely watched, but was always to be found in his place and put up a clever game.

WEDDING BELLS.

Nuptials of Miss Annie Anderson and Mr. John Boyd.

The home of Mr. Wm. Anderson, of Prenveaux, was the scene of a merry gathering on Wednesday afternoon, to witness the marriage of his daughter Annie to Mr. John Boyd, of Blairton. The bride was attired in a handsome gown of cream cashmere trimmed with chiffon and satin ribbon. Miss Hattie, sister of the bride, performed the duties of bridesmaid and wore a lovely dress of blue cashmere trimmed with cream lace and white satin ribbon.

The groom was supported by Mr. Duncafe, while Rev. Mr. Harris, of Marmora, performed the ceremony. About ninety-five guests sat down to the wedding supper, which was most inviting. The remainder of the evening was pleasantly spent in dancing and other amusements.

The presents to the bride were very numerous and costly, showing the high esteem in which she was held. A number of Havelock and Marmora young people were present.

Peterborough's Modern Store.

The Outlook for 1899

THIS STORE starts the new year with every indication pointing to a bigger success than ever. Our policy commends itself to everyone BUYING AND SELLING FOR SPOT CASH is the only system to-day that a successful business can be accomplished with. It gives us advantages and possibilities that cannot be equalled with the old fogy system.

This store has revolutionized the prices of Dry Goods in Peterborough, making it possible for the people of Peterborough and surrounding district to buy goods as cheap if not cheaper than any place in Canada. Our modern store and modern system of doing business has been a grand success, not withstanding all predictions to the contrary. Peterborough has shown herself big enough and a good enough business centre to maintain a first-class store, and we feel justified in still further keeping this store more than ever in the front rank of merchandising.

A New Feature.

The success of our Thursday Bargain Day has been so marked—the bargains have been so genuine—that no one can question them, and the crowds of delighted customers that participate in them every Thursday makes us feel that for the benefit of our out-of-town customers and for those who always do their shopping on Saturday, we ought to make another, A SATURDAY BARGAIN DAY, and we have decided to start the first Saturday of the New Year with ANOTHER GENUINE BARGAIN DAY such as this store has had the reputation of having.

Every Saturday morning dodgers will be distributed on the market and in the market hall, giving a detailed list of bargains for the day.

Come and see our first Saturday Bargain Day, all day Saturday and Saturday night.

KENNEL CLUB SHOW.

What Outsiders Think of the Dog Show which is to be Held Next Week.

The Kennel Gazette gives the following notice of the Peterborough Dog Show, under the heading "What Peterborough is Doing."

Undismayed by the small shortage in returns at their last show, the Peterborough Kennel Club has pluckily decided to give another and more pretentious fixture on January 11th and 12th. The show will be held under C.K.C. rules so that wins will count. Mr. H. W. Lacy will judge all classes, and his name should add entries to the list of competitors.

A brief history of the organization of the association will be interesting and possibly stimulate dog owners in other towns to go and do likewise. A public meeting was called in the council chamber on the evening of Nov. 22nd, which was very largely attended by representative business and professional men of the town. The Peterborough Kennel Club was there formed with the following officers: Patron and Patroness, Mr. Jas. Kendry, M.P., and Mrs. Kendry; Hon. President, Rev. V. Clementi; President C. B. McAllister; 1st Vice-President, Dr. Burnham; 2nd Vice-President, G. W. Hatton; Secretary Treasurer, Alf Terrill; Directors, Dr. Poole, chairman, and Messrs. D. J. Laundy, B. A. Morrow, A. H. Stratton, Peter Campbell, W. J. Sims, W. B. Bamford, R. Kerr, T. E. Bradburn, W. H. Moore and Dr. King. A motion was passed at the meeting to the effect that if the membership was increased to 100 by the 28th a bench show would be undertaken. At an adjourned meeting held on the 29th, the membership committee reported that 110 names had already been placed on the roll. It was then unanimously decided to hold the bench show and the following committee struck to arrange details, viz.: W. H. Moore, Dr. Burnham, C. B. McAllister, P. Campbell, W. J. Sims, A. H. Stratton, Jas. Head, Eric White, R. Kerr and Alf. Terrill, to whom we are indebted for a great portion of this information. Mr. Alfred Terrill was appointed Secretary-Treasurer, and B. R. Poole, V.S., Superintendent. The prizes were fixed at $3, $2 and $1, and it was decided to pay all awards before the show closed, which exhibitors will, we know, appreciate. At a subsequent meeting meeting of the committee Mr. H. W. Lacy, of Boston, was decided upon for judge, and on being communicated with, consented to act. The secretary says that if the number of enquiries received is any criterion to judge by, the show will be the biggest event held in Canada in some time. The correspondence involved is something stupendous. The prize list now contains 45 classes with the promise that any classes unprovided for will be opened up on the receipt of six entries for the same. Sex will be divided in every case when competition warrants. This club starts out with a substantial bank account to its credit and the best men of the town behind it as represented by the officers. The hall in which the show will be held is one of the best suited for an event of this kind in the Dominion, being well warmed and magnificently lighted. The freedom of the town will be given the exhibitors and visitors. Being centrally located and a converging point for seven in branches of the C.P.R. and Grand Trunk, Peterborough should draw from all quarters.

PEMBROKE SOUTHERN RAILWAY

The Lakefield Branch May be Extended to Meet it.

An Ottawa despatch to the Globe says: On Monday the new Pembroke Southern Railway was opened for traffic, the first train leaving Pembroke at 7 a.m. to connect at Golden Lake with the Ottawa, Arnprior & Parry Sound. The company now purpose extending the line fifty miles farther south, crossing the Irondale & Bancroft about ten miles east of Bancroft, and connecting with the Central Ontario at St. Olo, thus completing a direct line to Trenton. It is also expected by the company that the Grand Trunk will extend their branch already built from Peterborough to Lakefield, northeasterly about 35 miles to connect with the Pembroke Southern at St. Olo, which will still further shorten the distance to Toronto via Peterborough.

HOCKEY.

A full practice is to take place at the rink to-night.

The Berlin hockey team has disbanded and defaulted to Stratford last night.

Waterloo won from the Toronto Rowing Club team by 9 goals to 5 last night.

Lord Minto is to face the puck for the first game between the Aberdeens and the Ottawa II team.

The Kingston Whig contains the following reference to the hockey teams of that town:

The Frontenac hockeyists are home from their western tour, bringing with them what they went after—experience. They were obliged to cancel three matches for two reasons—soft ice and the impossibility of the whole team to remain away for a longer period. They played three matches, winning one. The teams they went up against are all good aggregations. Frontenacs went away in a weakened condition, minus Waddell on wing and McDonald at cover point. Robinson, a junior player, took Waddell's place. McRae played at cover point. Hamilton, who had not been on ice this season up to the hour of the trip, was taken along as spare man. On the trip up his skates were screwed on his boots, so as to be in readiness in case he should be needed. The hockeyists went into all the matches travel sore and fatigued, but the executive of the team are satisfied with the work performed by the different players. Guelph Nationals imported four men in order to defeat the Frontenacs. It must not be concluded that Frontenac's strongest team was defeated; not much. With all the "old heads" on the ice Frontenac can put up a better showing. Neither Murray nor Hiscock played at Listowel. In that match every man on the team went behind the puck, but they could not take Hiscock's place. Frontenacs speak in glowing terms of the splendid treatment accorded them everywhere they went. They expect to make a longer tour later on in the season, when members of the team can get away more conveniently.

Queen's team is putting up swift hockey this season, the best in many years. Every man is in the acme of condition and is working hard. Harris on the wing never played to better advantage, while Harty and Dalton in centre move together like clockwork. Ferguson on the wing is counted the one weak spot. He may be replaced by Brock, who intends putting in the balance of the term at the college. Merrill is at cover point with his foxy tricks, and anything that passes him is gathered into the web by Curtis. Hiscock, the star of past seasons, forms the last barrier, and it is safe to say that it it will be only a stray hot shot that passes the posts he guards.

If Queen's and Frontenacs come together in real earnest to wrestle for supremacy, it will be a grand though terrible battle; Waterloo will be outdone. The two teams are as equally matched, man for man, as could be desired. Frontenacs have perhaps a little stronger forward line, but on the other hand Queen's can negotiate a more stubborn defence. McDowall is a strong factor at cover point, but so also is Merrill, and the last named has the additional quality of being able to dash brilliantly and handle his stick well. Curtis and McRae at point are two more good men. McRae has many of the tricks possessed by his old-time playing mate, but Curtis has the advantage of generalship, is fast and can spurt like a racer. It would be almost like folly to bring these two teams together, where rivalry is so keen. One or the other would go out of the business and very likely to the hospital.

THE TURF.

The Louisville Driving and Fair Association has taken a radical step to do away with the long race nuisance, which was the bugbear of the grand circuit meeting last season. It consists in reducing the number of heats necessary to win races from three to two. Many of the horsemen were dissatisfied last year in the big races. Where there was a well-balanced field it was no uncommon thing for such races to stretch out into affairs requiring seven to ten trials. Under such circumstances a driver might see the races go over to the next day, when his charge was unfit for the test after the hard work of the previous day. Some unexpected pretender would thus romp away with the money. The counter objection is advanced by some owners that their horses may not be thoroughly ready in two heats, which may be won by the same animal terminating the event. But the general desire is to prevent events going over to the second day.

THE RING.

McCoy feels so confident of winning from Sharkey that he has written a letter to a New York man offering to box three heavyweights four rounds each, or two heavyweights six rounds each, the Saturday after the Sharkey fight. McCoy is in excellent condition and will relax his training after to morrow. George Forbes gave out to day that he had $10,000 to place at even money on McCoy.

GOOD TEMPLARS' WORK.

A Pleasant Evening Spent Among the Members of City Lodge.

City Lodge, No. 404, I.O.G.T., Peterborough, held their regular meeting last evening with a good attendance. After business discussions the first session was duly closed, followed by an open session and reception of visitors. The captains of the Reds and Blues, viz., Sister M. Hetherington and Bro. A. Warne then presented the Chief Templar with the programmes of the two contesting sides, which were rendered with success, leaving the Reds with 12 of a majority, which caused Sister Hetherington, captain of the Reds, to look pleasant.

This contest will continue until Easter when it will be closed and further information regarding it. All well wishers of temperance are cordially invited to call and spend the open session from 9 until 10 p.m., every Thursday evening, and to join in social intercourse and participate in the Good and Welfare of the evening. Lodge meets in hall corner George and Simcoe streets at 8 o'clock every Thursday evening. All welcome.

An Atlanta Ante-Bellum Reminder.

Mr. John C. Douglass, of Atlanta, a former resident of Peterborough, sends THE EXAMINER a "brooch" of cotton thread, which is interesting as a reminder of slavery days. It was spun by an old "mammy," a real surviving ante-bellum slave. The old mammy was a feature of the recent jubilee proceedings in Atlanta, and the "brooch" was made and presented to Mrs. Simmons, Mr. Douglass' sister, immediately after the one made for President McKinley. The "brooch" of thread is rolled on a folded corn stalk leaf, as was the universal method among the slaves "befoh the wah." Being next to the "brooch" made for the United States president—in touch as it were—it will have to ardent Americans an almost historic value. The mammy occupied an old cabin, a reproduction of that common forty years ago. In it was an old time darkey and his wife, the mammy, who was once sold for $3,500 The old woman spent her time spinning cotton and the old man shaved axe helves and strummed his banjo by turns. Realism was lent the scene by the presence of two pickaninies—the grandchildren, a jack rabbit, a dog, a possum and a coon. When asked by Mrs. Simmons how these days compared with slavery days, the old woman said that one old-time slavery nigger was "wuff a hull band wagon full er dem waffless call'd pussons now. Lor' bress yer, honey, 'mancerpatin' was de ruin ob de niggers ob de south."

TWIN TORTURERS!

Lumbago and Rheumatism made Harmless by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Lumbago and Rheumatism cause endless pain and suffering. Every man and woman who runs chances of getting wet, or catching cold, is liable to suffer from one or both. Our hospitals are full of sufferers from these diseases; none are more painful. Every nerve is on fire; every joint is a centre of agony; every muscle an area of torture. To move hand or foot makes the victim shriek with agony.

Rheumatism makes more cripples than all the railroad accidents that ever happened. Twisted, mis-shapen caricatures of humanity, who cannot walk without misery, are to be seen every day. The kidneys are to blame. If they are healthy you needn't fear Rheumatism or Lumbago. Dodd's Kidney Pills keep the kidneys healthy and cure Rheumatism and Lumbago.

Dodd's Kidney Pills ALWAYS CURE

STUCK IN THE SNOW.

Dangers of Traveling by Sledge In Siberia In Winter.

Traveling by sledge in Siberia in winter has its perils, as the experience of Mr. Robert L. Jefferson and his friends goes to illustrate. The incident is told in "Roughing It In Siberia:"

We had chartered six sorry looking horses to drag us on to the next stage. It was night when we started. The driver, maudlin drunk, had to be helped to his seat, and we set off along the narrow roadway at the usual gallop, which, however, soon dwindled into a mere shuffle through the snow. We had gone to sleep, and some hours after our departure Gaskell woke me and said he thought something was wrong.

The sledge was at a standstill, and our shouts to the yemshik brought no response. Black darkness prevailed. I bundled out of the sledge, so benumbed that I could scarcely move. I felt along the sledge, sinking to my knees in the snow.

The driver's perch was empty, and just then I stumbled over one of the horses, which was lying buried up to its neck. It was clear that the driver had fallen from his seat, and that the horses had wandered from the track. The poor beasts were stuck fast, and a closer inspection showed one of them to be dead, literally frozen to death. If we would save ourselves from the same fate, prompt action was necessary.

The other horses were nearly succumbing. They lay flat on their stomachs and nibbled at the snow. We cut the dead animal adrift, and, using the spare rope as whips, we stood on either side of the living and lashed them till our arms ached. At length they moved, and by pushing and pulling we got the sledge turned. Then, step by step, with much floundering and many falls, we began to retrace our way.

All this in pitch darkness in a raw, cold wind and in momentary expectation of one or all of the horses dropping dead.

It was a terrible experience, but we regained the road and finally reached the village.

Beats the Klondike.

Mr. A. C. Thomas, of Marysville, Tex., has found a more valuable discovery than has yet been made in the Klondike. For he suffered untold agony from consumption, accompanied by hemorrhages; and was absolutely cured by Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. He declares that Gold is of little value in Comparison with this marvelous cure; would have it, even if it cost a hundred dollars a bottle. Asthma, Bronchitis and all throat and lung affections are positively cured by Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Sold at any Drug Store. Regular size 50 cents and $1.00. Guaranteed to cure or price refunded.

The Danger of Disease.

The danger from a case of diphtheria in New York at any season of the year is far greater than the danger from a case of yellow fever in the same place. Still persons who would shun a street where a case of yellow fever existed would deliberately enter the apartment of a person suffering from diphtheria. A serious outbreak of typhoid fever creates but little consternation, and the presence in our midst of innumerable cases of tuberculosis, a disease which is responsible for an incredible number of deaths, is looked upon with indifference by the public. The misconception in regard to the danger from this class of diseases often renders the efforts of health officials ineffectual.—Alvah H Doty, M. D., in North American Review.

A Regular Polyglot.

A gentleman in a rural district drew down upon his head a storm of adverse criticism by marrying a second wife shortly after the demise of his first. Two of those good ladies who look generally upon the surface of things and who are ever ready with condemnation were discussing the disgraceful affair. "Why, my dear, there's his poor wife hardly cold in her grave, and he goes and marries another!" "Dreadful!" declared the other. "I never heard of such a thing." "I should think not indeed," went on No. 1 angrily. "Marrying wife after wife like that—why, the man's a regular polygot!"—Cornhill Magazine.

Baby Eczema and Scald Head.

Infants and young children are peculiarly subject to this terrible disorder, and if not promptly arrested it will eventually become chronic. Dr Chase made a special study of eczema and diseases of the skin, and we can confidently recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to cure all forms of eczema. The first application soothes the irritation and puts the little sufferer to rest.

ALL HEADACHES

ONE GLASS OF WINE.

A Belief That It Changed the History of This Country.

It is said that a single glass of wine probably wrecked the Democratic party in 1860. The story is worth telling. After the breaking up of the national Democratic convention at Charleston the party in Georgia held a state convention. Great excitement prevailed. The leaders of the party could not agree. It was a critical period.

The majority report indorsed the seceders or bolters at Charleston, while the minority report opposed their action. The leading champion of the minority was Herschel V. Johnson, and his followers were confident that his eloquence and logic would carry the day.

It is quite likely that such would have been the case but for an unfortunate mishap. Ex-Governor Johnson began his speech before the noon adjournment on the second day and concluded after dinner.

Old men who remember that speech say that it was a powerful argument, and the impression gained ground that after the noon recess the speaker would demolish his opponents with a few sledge hammer blows.

But the overconfident friends of the minority report were doomed to disappointment. Johnson felt the strain of the morning session so much that he was unable to eat anything, and he took a glass of wine upon an empty stomach to strengthen himself. This was a fatal mistake. That one glass of wine perhaps changed the destiny of the nation!

The great orator resumed his speech, but the wine had nauseated him. He was hazy, verbose and unintelligible at times. His style and argument lacked vigor, consistency and positiveness. His friends looked at one another in despair. The men on the other side were exultant. It was evident that the speaker had damaged his own cause.

Then Howell Cobb and Henry R. Jackson followed each other for the majority report. They spoke with an air of expectant triumph and captured the convention.

The majority report was adopted. It is unnecessary to follow the history of the next few weeks. The national Democracy was completely disrupted and put two tickets in the field. Lincoln was elected and the country was plunged into a civil war. Had Johnson succeeded in inducing the Georgia convention to adopt his conservative ideas, it is safe to say that other southern states would have fallen into line with our commonwealth, and the national Democratic party would have remained united.

This is the story of what a little glass of wine did. It ruined a great party, caused a disastrous war, and besides the loss of life cost the south over $4,000,000,000. Perhaps this is rather speculative, but there are many who believed it a generation ago.—Atlanta Constitution.

KINGSTON'S RECORD

For Producing Famous Men and Dodd's Kidney Pills Cures.

Kingston, Dec. 19th.—The Limestone City has given Canada a majority of her greatest and most famous men. Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Oliver Mowat, Sir Geo. Kirkpatrick, Sir Richard Cartwright, and many other notable personalities claim the city as their home.

Kingston is no less famous as the scene of many of the most wonderful and startling cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills, than for the first named reason.

Now another is added to this long list of cures. Mr. Robert Orr, Pine street, reports that after suffering for years with Bladder trouble, Dodd's Kidney Pills completely cured him though all other remedies had failed. Every city has a similar experience. Dodd's Kidney Pills have cured every time.

Didn't Institute Him.

Here is a glimpse of the seamy side of life in Cornwall from The Cornish Magazine:

"I'm afraid, Jenny, you irritate your husband with your long tongue."

"Aw, no, my dear Miss Vivian, I'd never say nawthen to en. To'ther day I was 'ome waitin for'n to come 'ome to supper. Eight o'clock come, an no Jan; 9 o'clock come, an no Jan; 10 o'clock come, an no Jan. I put up me bonnet an shoal an went to every kiddly wink in town, thout Dyke Winsor's. When I come there, there wor Jan. Says I, 'You ugly murderen veilan, theest killed thee fust wife an now theest want to kill me, too,' an he up an knacked me down."

An Easy Way Out.

At a school inspection some of the boys found a difficulty in the correct placing of the letters "i" and "e" in such words as "believe," "receive," etc.

When the inspector said blandly, "My boys, I will give you an infallible rule, one I invariably use myself," the pupils were all attention, and even the master pricked up his ears.

The inspector continued: "It is simply this: Write the 'i' and 'e' exactly alike and put the dot in the middle over them."—Liverpool Mercury.

Too Great a Risk.

"James, if anybody inquires for me today, tell them I am not in."

"Yes, sir."

"There might possibly be one who would not have a bill," muttered the young man, "but I'll not risk it."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Hoosier Poet Talks Interestingly to a Reporter.

The Hoosier Poet was busy when the Tales of the Town man called upon him.

"Glad you came in," he said. "Not that I've been—but that's General New's story. General New of the Indianapolis Journal called on General Grant during the latter's first term and found the president warrior laughing heartily. Of course New looked as though he wanted to know the reason, and the general told him. He said he'd just had a call from an old friend who lived in Galena, Ills., one of his early day acquaintances, who said he'd been in Washington for two or three days, but had been so busy that he was unable to call upon his old friend, the president, any sooner, and he apologized for the delay. General Grant looked at him in his comical fashion and gravely said:

"'Well, John, I haven't been lonesome!'

"You see, the visit occurred at a time when the president was being harassed to death by callers from all directions, who had driven him nearly to distraction.

"A man who travels a good deal comes to know towns because of certain points that are usually entirely personal with him. Sometimes a bad hotel, sometimes an extremely early train, will stamp a characteristic on a town. I remember that my old friend Bill Nye was once chatting with Senator Shirley of Maine and remarked upon the fact that he (Nye) was born at Shirley, in the senator's state, adding that the town had doubtless been named for one of the senator's ancestors.

"'I didn't know,' said the senator, 'that there was such a town in Maine as Shirley.'

"'I didn't know it either,' said Nye, 'until I was born there!'"

And the poet went on with his writing.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

HE COWED THE BULLY.

Harold Frederic's Encounter With a Lordly Prussian Lieutenant.

Harold Frederic's self confidence and power of dominating strangers stood him in good stead in one of his first visits—if not his very first visit—to Berlin. The incident as he related it seemed natural enough to an American not brought up in awe of a military caste, but to those who knew Germany it was almost surprising that he came through it with his life. He had been paying some formal diplomatic calls, and, in the evening dropped in at the Cafe Bauer in the unwonted glory of a frock coat and a tall silk hat. This hat was carefully hung on a hat stand, and Frederic sat down to read an English newspaper just arrived.

Enter a particularly fine specimen of the lieutenant, booted and spurred and sworded and epauletted. He brushed against the hat stand, knocked Frederic's hat over into the sawdust and swaggered to his seat without so much as looking around. The slight to the hat was more than Frederic could endure.

In a towering passion he went to the lieutenant, stood over him and pointed to the object on the floor. "Pick up that hat, sir!" he roared. The officer stared amazed; the waiters were paralyzed with terror at hearing one so much more than human so addressed by a civilian. "Pick up that hat!" repeated Frederic in a tone more menacing than before. And the lieutenant did what he was told. He was as irresistibly dominated by the courage and force of the man as a schoolboy before his master, or perhaps he thought Frederic carried the customary west American revolver.—Saturday Review.

Tilbury, Ont.

GIVES A VIVID ACCOUNT OF HOW

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS

CURED HIM OF SEVERE KIDNEY DISEASE AFTER DETROIT AND ONTARIO DOCTORS FAILED.

The Doan Kidney Pill Co.

Gentlemen,—For a number of years I led a sedentary life, and was finally compelled to give up my situation on account of ill health. What was the trouble? Doctors disagreed as to my malady. I paid out hundreds of dollars in various kinds of medicines, consulted some of the leading doctors in Ontario and Detroit, but did not receive a permanent cure. It is true these physicians gave me temporary relief, but it was only for a while. I seemed to be growing worse all the time. Some doctors who diagnosed my case said it was dyspepsia of the bowels; others, that my liver was out of order. They prescribed, but no cure.

I eventually lost all faith in practitioners, and was about giving up in despair when I fell in with a fellow-traveller in the City of London, who insisted upon me trying Doan's Kidney Pills. I was sceptical,—told him that there was no use,—their remedies would be like all other patent medicines, a fake. He said, "try them," if they do you no good they will do you no harm. Oh! I said, that is the old story. I might as well burn my money. No, he said, one box will not cost you a cent, here it is. No, I said, I don't want you to pay for me. Never mind, he said, just try this box and if you don't get relief it is a sure thing that it is not kidney trouble that you have. I was so convinced that I was troubled with my kidneys that I grew angry. My friend left me one box. I felt like throwing it away, but on second thought I concluded that that would be ungentlemanly and wrong, so I tried the pills, and to my great surprise I found them doing me good. I bought 3 boxes for $1.25, and then I bought 3 boxes more. I used six boxes and have one left. I am now a cured man, sound and perfectly healthy. I now weigh 185¼ pounds. Before I used Doan's Kidney Pills I weighed as low as 128½ pounds. What was the trouble? Kidney disease. What was the cause? I cannot tell you. My appetite was gone, lame back, pains all over me, loss of memory, and at times as nervous as a man with the D.T's. My urine is now as clear as water. I am an entirely different man, physically, morally and mentally.

My suffering in the past the most trenchant pen couldn't tell. If I had the vocabulary of a Daniel Webster, I could not relate the pain and suffering I endured for years. Fellow reader if you are troubled with kidney complaint, be persuaded,—try Doan's Kidney Pills—and just as sure as you are a sufferer you will be cured. I firmly believe that the worst case of kidney trouble in the world can be cured by Doan's Kidney Pills.

I only wish that I was possessed of a faculty of putting things in a more charming way, but the main thing I want to say is that once I was a diseased and broken down man, now I am robust and strong. I believe I owe—in fact I know it—my healthy condition at present to the healing power of Doan's Kidney Pills. Doan's Kidney Pills will never die, but will be the means of saving thousands and thousands of our fellowmen from an early and premature grave if they will only have faith to give them a fair trial. I wish I only had the burning eloquence of a Demosthenes, and then I would fail in doing justice to Doan's Kidney Pills.

CHAPTER XXIV.

A NEW LINK IN THE CHAIN.

"I don't know," said Neil Bathurst. "You may change your opinion about that, Rob, when you have heard the whole story; and that I can't tell you now. It would take too much time. But I will tell you this, there is a clear case of circumstantial evidence, and that of the strongest kind, against this girl whom Arteveldt married, the very night he got that death blow. His mother will hunt her to the ends of the earth, and I must find her, and give no thought to anything else until I do. Now then, in a pell mell rush for this girl, or woman, they are leaving some loopholes open; because they can't see them. I can see them, however, and I tell you they need looking after."

"And you want me to stop up the loopholes?" asked Jocelyn, with a laugh.

"I want you to go straight back to the city, and worm yourself into the confidence of that scamp Fordham, who knows some of Arteveldt's secrets, of the off-colour sort. And I want you to keep an eye on the house which stands next to, or rather is a part of, the building where the murder was committed. I'll give you some points; and we must contrive to have a talk to-night, when all these stupid people are safe in bed."

"You want me to go to the city?" said Rob, with a puzzled look. "Where are you going, Neil?"

"I'm going to stay here."

"Here!"

"Yes, here! If I can't get a thread to follow in this village, I can't get one anywhere."

"Well! I suppose I must let Mr. Bradwardine drop for a while. However, I fancy that I possess about as much information as he does, at the present moment. He's waiting for something to turn up, for he has got to the length of his tether. What's your lay here, Neil?"

"I'm cultivating Dr. Austin."

"Doctor Austin!"

"Yes. He is the guardian of the supposed murderess. She came to the city a little less than three months ago, fresh from this rural dell. Why, Rob, she arrived the very day that you made your appearance. I was to have met her that evening at Ruthven's, but sent my regrets by poor Arteveldt."

A very peculiar expression was creeping into the face of Rob Jocelyn, but the darkness concealed it from his companion, who went on speaking very low, for they were moving toward the little hotel now.

"Well, as I told you that morning, Arteveldt met his fate that night—his fate indeed! This Lenore Armyn—this country girl—made rapid progress in the city. I fancy Doctor Austin was not a very strict guardian. I wonder if he so much as knows of the marriage and murder."

"Don't know. But I tell you, old boy, your head was level when you came here. I guess I can give you something that you may work out, perhaps. You know 'Brady' and I arrived here—let me see—why, the night after the murder. Something took me with the notion that I had better look after Mr. B.: so I went down the avenue that morning, and caught him just leaving the house. I followed him to an office, where he enquired about the trains to Fairlie, and bought a ticket; then I went to my quarters, got myself up as an honest census-taker, and came on the same train. As I was about to say, a man can't come into this town, or leave it, without being observed more or less, and it was not strange that I should see Dr. Austin riding opposite me in the same coach that brought me and my game to this 'district'; for he did come on that coach, and he came from the city by the same train that brought us."

"He did! Then my reasoning was sound."

"Your reasoning generally is pretty sound, my boy. Now, I can tell you a little about Dr. Austin. He is the best and kindest of men—that's what all the villagers think, and I fully coincide with them. He is in moderately comfortable circumstances, and has a fat, jolly little wife, who is universally popular. Every one here will swear by Dr. Austin. These facts I have picked up at odd times while circulating about town. Have you seen him?"

"Yes; and I think you have hit him off correctly. Nevertheless, I must find the fugitive bride through him. Have you heard any mention of Miss Armyn in your rounds, Rob?"

"Well—yes; I have heard a little about her," replied Rob, with that peculiar intonation which Neil knew meant something suppressed. "But here we are, Neil; let's change the subject; and to-night, if you will be so good as to leave your door unlocked, I will give you a call. I know every corner of this little trap, and everybody except Brady goes to bed before nine o'clock."

"We will follow their example—temporarily," replied Neil, with a laugh.

They entered the hotel, resuming their "characters" as they did so, and, after a few yawns and nervous enquiries about burglars, John Jacob retired, soon to be followed by the census-taker and all the rest of the household. Jason Bradwardine could be heard pacing restlessly up and down his room till a late hour. But finally the sound of his footsteps ceased, and the little hotel was profoundly quiet.

A little after midnight, two forms might have been seen to emerge from a rear door, and glide away in the direction of the stables. They seemed to have no designs upon the horses, however, for they went straight toward a wood-pile, and seated themselves thereon as comfortably as they could.

"There," said the taller of the two, "here we are, safe and comfortable—or tolerably so," giving a hitch, as a not particularly soft log rolled a little under his weight. "Such a supernaturally quiet house is the worst place in the world for private interviews, not to mention the wafer-like quality of the walls. But nobody will look for night-larks on the wood-pile; so begin at the beginning, Neil, and tell me all about this business."

Neil Bathurst did begin at the beginning—at the very moment when Jocelyn had bidden him good morning, and then gone in pursuit of Bradwardine. He described the scene at the bridal banquet, and all that followed, omitting nothing. Then he reviewed the evidence for and against Lenore, told of his various interviews with Kate, Jess Warren, George Fordham, and others; of the finding of the mysterious threatening notes, of the visit of the veiled woman to Lenore Armyn, of his doubts and suspicions, up to the very time when he had set out for Fairlie.

Rob Jocelyn was an attentive listener, and he interrupted the narrator less frequently than was his wont when listening to such a story. Neil Bathurst, who knew him so well, was fully convinced that some idea, the nature of which he could not guess, was working in the brain of the astute Jocelyn, and he waited quietly until Rob should see fit to develop it. When his story was done, they sat silent for a long time, Jocelyn seeming to have an unusual amount of thinking on hand. At last he got up, reseated himself in a new position, and then said:—

"Well! And so you think that this next-door house needs to be watched?"

"I do. I have gathered this much information concerning it. It was leased a few days after Arteveldt took the other one. Leased by a middle-aged, respectable sort of widow woman, who intends opening an aristocratic boarding-house. Now, as I told you, when I examined the premises, I quickly saw how easy it would be for anyone concealed in that unoccupied house to get out on the roof and enter Arteveldt's through the scuttleholes or hatch, and then go back the same way, letting themselves out without difficulty. Now, then, if I had mentioned this idea, what would have been the result? They would have insisted upon searching that house, and would fail in accomplishing anything except to put the party on guard. Mind, my theory is not that the house was entered by someone who merely knew it to be vacant, and who had no interest in it further, when, I repeat, that the house was taken within the same week that Clarence rented its fellow, and that, in spite of the fact that while his, Arteveldt's, house, was all ready for occupation a week before the wedding, this other house was not yet entirely fitted up, and was, and is still, unoccupied, you will comprehend my idea."

"Yes!" replied Jocelyn, in that short, quick way usual with him when his brain was busy.

"If I am correct, and the party is not alarmed by a search warrant, in all probability he will use, or someone else will use, the house, for a short time, at least. Do you see my drift?"

"Yes! And I'll take care of the house. Go on, Neil; what more?"

"Fordham; cultivate him. I have already told you all that I can to guide you there."

"All right, my boy! I'll set out by the next stage. And—I'll leave Bradwardine in your charge."

"I don't know about that, Rob; I'm afraid I should have to drop him."

"No, you won't. You have a stronger reason for keeping a lookout on him than ever I had."

"I? How do you make out that?"

"Well—for one thing—didn't you observe by that precious register that he was here in August last? He has seen Lenore Armyn, and you have not."

"No; and I could not get a picture of her; no one had such a thing. But, Rob, that's not a sound reason after all. I think you can give a better one."

"Yes," replied Rob Jocelyn, "I can, my boy; and here it is:—The woman who wrote those mysterious letters to Jason Bradwardine, years ago, was Mrs. Armyn, who died here some nine months ago. The woman who fled from Elm Valley, and who called herself while there, 'Mistress Bourne,' was Mrs. Armyn. The child he tried to steal was little Lenore Armyn. And the game Jason Bradwardine is in search of now is the same that you are hunting down—Lenore Armyn Arteveldt, the fugitive bride and supposed murderess."

CHAPTER XXV.

Kind reader, with the rapidity of thought, than which nothing speeds faster, let us transport ourselves, for a very little time, to another country and another scene.

It is the middle of November. Nay, it is the very day that comes with the sun chariot at its heels, and looks down to behold Clarence Arteveldt a corpse. It is the very hour when over in America that dreary inquest is being held, and Lenore Armyn is being pronounced a murderess.

But now we are in England; we stand upon the threshold of Hillary hall, the stately country seat of Sir Hillary Massinger, who owns a splendid, modern palace in London, and a costly bijou, called, fashionably, a shooting box, in the Highlands; who is ...ner many acres, many servants, and many, many thousand pounds per annum.

We enter the private cabinet of Sir Hillary Massinger, where everything is stately, antique, magnificent, and almost priceless. No stranger could enter there without gazing spellbound. But the room might be furnished in deal, so little notice do its inmates take of the beautiful surroundings.

The elder of the two men who sit at a carved table, strewn with business-like papers, and letters innumerable, is Sir Hillary Massinger—a proud, stern-looking old man, tall and erect, but wearing upon his brow lines indicative of care and trouble, and, above it, scanty locks of snow-white hair.

The other is a younger man; he may be twenty-five or thirty-five, or even older; you can not guess his age by his face. It is smooth-shaven, and slightly florid, the eyes are not large, and are of a blue-grey colour; they are introspective, inscrutable eyes, and—sometimes—they are keen and restless. The hair is thick and soft; light brown in colour, and cut close, very close, to the splendidly-formed head. It is not a handsome face, but it is a strong one; as strong as if cast in iron—and yet—there are times when the face, the eyes, the very figure of the man wears an expression of unutterable weariness and profound melancholy. He is below the medium height, broad-shouldered, and thoroughly English in build. And he is an Englishman, and a grand one. Sir Hillary Massinger's vis-a-vis and companion is Francis Ferrars, the first and best of English detectives. He sits before Sir Hillary, in the great carved chair, with all the ease and grace of a drawing-room habitue. And he looks the old nobleman squarely in the eye, as he says, in a firm, resolute tone:—

"I have waited upon you to-day, Sir Hillary, because I have some reason for thinking that you are becoming dissatisfied with my work, and I do not choose to be misunderstood, or to have my efforts undervalued, even by you. I must, therefore, trespass upon your time, while I review, for your benefit, my work for the past three years and more."

"IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY."

To Wm. McCabe, Esq., Managing Director, North American Life Assurance Co., Toronto:

DEAR SIR.—Your official notice came duly to hand, apprising me of the results obtainable upon my 15 year endowment Policy in your Company for $1,000 which matured on the 5th inst. Of the various options you have given me viz.:

Cash value	$1,564 98
Paid-up Policy, payable at my death, for	2,560 00
Yearly Income for life of	166 20

I have decided upon the cash value; and it gives me pleasure to testify that, as I anticipated it would be when I took out the policy, IT IS VERY SATISFACTORY. This returns me the full premiums of the 15 years and over 4½ per cent. compound interest, in addition to which you have carried the risk upon my life. In view of the low rates of interest which have been obtainable during the latter portion of the period, it is difficult to see how this excellent result could have been surpassed.

Yours sincerely,
(Rev.) J. THOMPSON, D. D.

TAKING THE CITADEL.

In war when a town is taken by storm there is no use in merely capturing the outworks or lower fortifications: As long as the enemy holds the highest stronghold the town is not conquered.

In warring against disease there is no use in simply overcoming the minor symptoms. There are plenty of mere stimulating preparations largely composed of alcohol, which give a false and temporary exhilaration followed by relapse, but Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a true and radical remedy. It contains no alcohol. It does not inebriate or create a craving for intoxicating stimulants. It does more than overcome the outer symptoms of disease. It attacks it in its highest stronghold and routs it absolutely and completely from the very citadel of life. No honest dealer will advise you to accept a substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery" that he may make a little larger profit.

"I feel it my duty to write and tell you what Dr. Pierce's medicines have done for me," says Miss Emma Lee, of Williford, Sharp Co., Ark., in a friendly communication to Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y. "I was suffering severely and tried several doctors' remedies but received only very little relief. I had bronchitis, catarrh, and also womb disease. I took eight bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Favorite Prescription.' As soon as I had taken the first bottle I could see that the medicine was helping me. I also used the local treatment you suggested.

"My sister says your medicine did her more good than anything she ever took. She was down in bed and could not walk until after she had taken your medicine, and now she goes where she pleases and helps to do her work."

Every suffering man or woman should write for a free copy of Dr. Pierce's great thousand-page illustrated Common Sense Medical Adviser. It will be sent paper-bound for the bare cost of customs and mailing, 21 one-cent stamps; or in heavy, handsome cloth-binding for 50 stamps.

ITCHING SKIN DISEASES

Chronic Eczema spread all over my head. I had two doctors and tried lotions, but received little benefit. The dreadful itching became almost intolerable, and when I was heated, the Eczema became painful, and almost distracted me. Tried CUTICURA REMEDIES, the Eczema rapidly disappeared, and I am well with no trace of any cutaneous disease.
J. EMMETT REEVES,
Feb. 22, '98. Box 125, Thorntown, Ind.

Was afflicted with an itching rash all over my body. I could not sleep, but was compelled to lie awake and scratch all the time. My father and two brothers were afflicted with the same thing. We all suffered terribly for a year and a half. Tried cakes of CUTICURA SOAP and three boxes of CUTICURA (ointment) cured the four of us completely.
Feb. 22, 1898. RICHARD ANDERSON,
Geneva, Box Elder Co., Utah.

My hands were completely covered with Eczema, and between my fingers the skin was perfectly raw. I could get no ease night or day. I was in a rage of itching. My husband had to dress and undress me like a baby. The best physicians' medicines gave me no relief, and drove me almost crazy. I used the CUTICURA (ointment), and five minutes after the first application I was perfectly easy, and slept soundly all that night, and I have not had the Eczema in two years.

A DANGEROUS DUTY.

INSPECTING DOUBLE BOTTOMS IN OUR NAVAL VESSELS.

It Is Extremely Hazardous and Trying Work, and Many Precautions Are Necessary to Prevent Loss of Life During the Operation.

There is one phase of the ship life of the American naval officer that is scarcely known to the layman and that can hardly be understood by him as he looks upon the modern ship in all her attractive cleanliness and meets her neatly uniformed officers upon the spotless upper deck. Not only are the parts of the ship in sight kept clean and free from rust and decay, but also those far down, contracted spaces that never see the light of day. These include the cellular compartments between the inner and outer skins of the ship, known technically as the "double bottom," and other places that separate the magazines and various built up structures within the ship from the outer skin.

These narrow compartments are especially susceptible to dampness and rust, and in order that those who have the care of them may do their duty well and so prevent the decay of the ship a system of inspection has been devised, and the inspectors must be, under the naval regulations, commissioned officers. A permanent board of inspection is formed upon each ship, which must consist of one engineer and two line officers. The duty of this board is periodically to make personal inspections of all the parts of the ship, examine everything critically, suggest remedies for any evils that may be found to exist and to report to the commanding officer, for transmission to the navy department, the condition of the vessel in detail.

Uniforms are discarded while making these inspections, and clad in seamen's ordinary working suits these officers crawl upon all fours throughout the length of the bottom of the ship, wriggle snakelike through narrow openings and examine with their own eyes every inch of the surface of the thin steel plates. The paint of these compartments, softened by dampness in some places and by heat and the steam laden air of the boiler rooms in others, rubs off upon the working suits, and an hour's crawling transforms the neat officer into a very sorry spectacle. In some modern navies this duty is performed by the enlisted men, the officers being excused from it, but in our navy the feeling exists that an enlisted man should not be asked to go where an officer is not willing to lead. The result is that "things always work" with the Americans and the efficiency of the fleet is assured.

Numerous precautions must be taken to avoid the risk of losing life while performing this duty, for it is attended with no little danger. The atmosphere of confined spaces entirely or partly closed for a considerable length of time becomes robbed of its oxygen in the formation of rust and is soon made unfit to sustain life. If possible, such compartments are blown out with pure air led through a hose from a blower duct and all manhole plates removed before being entered. A lighted candle is always carried by the inspecting officer upon his crawling tour. If the candle burns dimly or seems upon the point of being extinguished, there is a deficiency of oxygen, and he will immediately seek the nearest opening leading from the compartment and leave it at once. Men are stationed at places as near as possible to him, so that they may hear his voice and render immediate assistance in case of need. No one is allowed to enter any confined space on board ship without an uncovered light, although in addition a portable electric light is carried frequently to render the inspection more thorough.

It not infrequently happens that officers and men become so wedged between bulkheads and beams while performing this duty as to make it extremely difficult to remove them, and more than one officer of the navy is upon the retired list today because of permanent injury to his health contracted while performing this arduous labor. Because of the care exercised it is rare that a life is lost in this service, but in one case at least the rashness of a man proved fatal to him. One of the main boilers of the cruiser Newark, while flagship of the south Atlantic station, having been tightly closed for a month, while empty, in order to preserve it from deterioration, the coppersmith of that vessel, an energetic, faithful man, thought its interior should be examined and, although warned repeatedly never to enter such a boiler without an open light, removed an upper manhole plate and crawled in upon the braces with an electric light. He told no one that he was going into the boiler, and no one was stationed to assist him in case of need. His dead body was found half out and half in the boiler manhole with the electric light still burning brightly within the boiler. He had evidently crawled in upon the braces, felt a faintness creeping over him and had endeavored to regain the open air, but lost consciousness just as life lay within his reach, and so died of asphyxiation.

The air in the boiler had been entirely robbed of its oxygen by the iron of the shell in the formation of rust, and the residuum was unfit to breathe. A lighted candle was snuffed out immediately upon being thrust into the boiler, and this condition prevailed until a lower manhole plate was removed, when the heavy gas ran out as water might, and the air within soon came to be quite pure. No more vivid illustration of the dangers to be encountered in the care of ships afloat and the precautions necessary to be taken in this duty could be given than this incident, which shows that shot and shell and bursting steam pipes are not the only dangers that confront the officers and men of Uncle Sam's navy.—New York Sun.

IN RUSTIC WAYS.

The blackbirds whistle all day long
A rhythmic gladness in their song,
And night and morning down the lane
Drifts by the cowbells' rude refrain.

The flicker dips on golden wings,
And far across the meadow swings
The swallow skims in lines of grace
Like to the curves that painters trace.

Above, below and everywhere
A sense of living thrills the air.
Spring's message through the silent sent,
With earth and wood and sky is blent.

The hedgerow blossoms stain the sod,
The south winds make the grasses nod,
And woolly lambs in awkward play
Down the green hillside ambling stray.

Along the blue horizon rim
The lights and shadows sink or swim,
And pencilled faintly on the skies
A ghostly half moon's crescent lies.

The blackbirds chant the whole day long
A rhythmic madness in their song,
And dusk and dawn along the lane
Echoes the cowbells' rude refrain.

Obedience of Orders.

A naval commander in the reign of Queen Anne was ordered to cruise with a squadron within certain limits on the coast of Spain. Having received information that a Spanish fleet was in Vigo beyond his limits, he resolved to risk his personal responsibility for the good of his country. He accordingly attacked and defeated the Spanish fleet with uncommon gallantry. When he joined the admiral under whom he served, he was ordered under arrest, and was asked, if he did not know that by the articles of war he was liable to be shot for disobedience of orders.

He replied with great composure that he was very sensible that he was, but added, "The man who is afraid to risk his life in any way when the good of his country requires it is unworthy of a command in her majesty's service."—Nuggets.

What He Found.

"I've opened about 8,000,000,000 oysters in my day," said the old oysterman who sells you the real genuine unfattened and unspoiled "salts," a penny apiece, in the shadow of one of the big market buildings, "and I have never found a pearl in one yet.

"But I've found something just as good as pearls," he added with a wink. "I have found four nice paying tenement houses and good balances in eight savings banks. There is a good deal in an oyster shell besides pearls, young man, if you will look close."—New York World.

The Sensible Girl.

"No," said the heroine of the "smart" novel, "I can never be your wife."

"But why?" wailed the stricken man.

"Because," she replied, "you do not converse in epigrams."—Philadelphia North American.

$35,000 FUR BUSINESS
TO BE SOLD.

As we are about to dispose of our Fur Business here this spring in order to consolidate the energy and capital in our Toronto business, (J. & J. Lugsdin)—we find it necessary to at once reduce our large stock of Fine Furs to as low an amount as it is possible, before the 15th of February, 1899.

This means to the people of Peterborough and vicinity an opportunity to purchase High-Class Home-Manufactured Furs from a stock that is recognized as the finest and largest between Toronto and Montreal—and at prices that the shortness of the time—about one month—makes absolutely necessary to sell at a big sacrifice.

Space does not permit us to enumerate the many close quotations we are giving in Fur Coats, Jackets, Cloaks, Capes, Caps, Ruffs, Muffs, Gauntlets, Collarettes, etc. Sufficient to say—that the word "Bargain"—taken at its full meaning—exactly explains the situation.

On Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, while we will be open for business, we will also be going through the whole stock, marking down to sale price every article. On Thursday and following days you can reap the benefit of this two days work.

"Shop early and"——— but 'tis useless to tell interested and sensible people of the advisability of following a course so reasonable.

A Dangerous Experiment.

City Physician—I confess, Mr. Inland, that I cannot tell as yet what is the matter with you. You say you were in good health when you left Inlandville?

Caller (weakly)—Perfect health, perfect.

"How long have you been in the city?'

"'Bout three days."

"How have you passed the time?"

"Just walking about quietly looking at the streets and the people."

"Humph! Very strange. Then you hadn't even a commission to execute—no purchases to make?"

"No. I spent my whole time trying to do what my wife said. She told me to watch all the well dressed ladies and give her a description of the latest fashions."

APPALLING DEATH

From Kidney Disease Prevented by Dodd's Kidney Pills, Only.

"Kidney Disease." Do you know what it means? It means that the kidneys are either rotten, or rotting; the blood is full of poisonous, death-dealing corruption; that the Kidneys can't do their work; that the victim is a walking charnel-house; that his hours are numbered; that the victim MUST take Dodd's Kidney Pills if he does not want to die.

Have you Kidney Disease? Is your skin hot and dry; memory failing; breath short; urine, reddish, or pale colored; does it scald when passing; is your appetite changeable; do your ankles swell; have you bitter taste in the mouth on getting up mornings; is there a brick-dust deposit in your urine?

Any of these signs is proof positive of Kidney Disease. Will you be cured, or will you die? Dodd's Kidney Pills are the only means on earth that will cure you. They never fail.

Moslem Exodus From Crete.

Rome, Jan. 7.—Letters from Italian officers in Crete state that, in spite of the apparent reconciliation between Christians and Mussulmans, the exodus of the latter continues, while the Christians who had fled from the island, fearing Mussulman persecution, are flocking back. Before very long Crete will be exclusively Christian. A Mussulman exodus from countries which come under Christian sway is a phenomenon often witnessed.
